Anderson awarded $30K scholarship

Charles L. Anderson of Cohasset begins his undergraduate studies at Bowdoin College this fall with a $30,000 four-year Henry David Thoreau Scholarship grant. As one of 11 HDT Scholars named this year in Massachusetts, he will pursue environmental subjects.

The son of Dr. Michael and Ms. Sheryl Anderson, Charles graduated from Cohasset High in June. Interestingly enough, he becomes the second Cohasset High student in as many years to be named an HDT Scholar. Last year, Christopher Golden received the honor.

Charlie, as he is known to his friends, had a stellar academic career at Cohasset High with high-honor grades all four years. He completed six advanced placement courses and served as a teacher's aide in the AP Biology course. As part of an independent project, he studied the salinity level of Cohasset Harbor in various locations and measured the effect of rainwater runoff on the harbor's marine life and its fishing/lobster industries. The town received a $10,000 grant from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology as a result of Charlie's investigations.

Some of his extracurricular activities during high school included the crew team, as stroke seat and coxswain, where he achieved several first-place finishes; the Cohasset High Student Council, as treasurer during his senior year; and service/medical missions to Appalachia and Haiti. He also worked as head mechanic for Cohasset Cycle Sports.

Now in its fourth year, the HDT Scholarship Foundation has distributed nearly $1.5 million to close to 50 undergraduate students and to outstanding environmental programs at colleges and universities throughout New England and beyond. Beside Bowdoin, Charlie's destination, school which HDT Scholars attend include Bates, Boston College, Colby, Cornell, Dartmouth, Duke, Harvard, MIT, Northeastern, Oberlin, Tufts, Wellesley and Williams.

Individual grants are distributed to HDT Scholars at the rate of $7,500 per year and are for tuition use only. They are named in honor of the celebrated American writer-naturalist who first sounded the call for environmental preservation.

To find out more about HDT Scholarships, or to download an application, visit the Web site at www.thoreauscholar.org. The Foundation's offices are located at 265 Medford St., Somerville 02143; and the telephone is 617-666-6900.

Guess Who's coming to Cohasset?

'60s rockers have 'No Time' for you

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Saturday's season-closer at the South Shore Music Circus will be like getting two superstar bands for the price of one.

The occasion is owing to the recent reunion of featured act The Guess Who, in the band's Classic Lineup including vocalist/frontman Burton Cummings and original lead guitarist Randy Bachman. This nucleus of the band that became known as Canada's first major rock 'n' roll export in the late 1960s/early 70s was the main force behind the Guess Who's red-hot streak of hit singles for the era, including "These Eyes," "Laughing," "Undun," "No Time" and the original "American Woman."

It was during the peak of this success that Bachman decided to leave the band in 1970, joining forces with two of his brothers and a friend to form Bachman Turner Overdrive shortly thereafter. In the mid 70s, BTO racked up its own string of hits, in a style decidedly more macho-tough, heavy-rocking and guitar-powered than Bachman's former band, featuring tunes like "Let It Ride," "Takin' Care of Business" and "You Ain't Seen Nothin' Yet."

Although currently touring with his one-time Guess Who-mate under that band's moniker, Bachman recognizes the enduring hit-making legacies of both groups, and knows that fans flocking to this summer's reunion shows with Cummings and crew mainly just want to hear the old hits. Cummings promises healthy, hefty and fired-up doses from both band repertoire's on the Cohasset stop of this North American tour Saturday, Aug. 31. The show begins at 8 p.m.

"This whole reunion started three years ago when we did a four-song set at the closing ceremonies of the Pan-American Games in Winnepeg," said Bachman by phone from his home in British Columbia. "And the response from the audience on that occasion was just overwhelming. We felt that finally, after a couple of decades, the time was right for a reunion and tour throughout Canada if not all North America."

It turned out that the reunion and resulting tour would in fact extend to North America. But first, as Bachman noted, he and Cummings thought it necessary to reconvene what they thought would amount to the ideal Classic Guess Who Lineup, which is the one currently on tour and actually not fully the original personnel nor necessarily the band heard on the now classic-rock radio staple hits. Of the reunited quintet, only Bachman and drummer Garry Peterson are actual originals; even Cummings is in fact the Guess Who's second vocalist, replacing original Chad Allen (who sang the band's first hit "Shakin' All Over" in 1965).

The Guess Who wraps up the summer concert season at the South Shore Music Circus with a concert Saturday, Aug. 31.

"What a lot of people forget about the Guess Who is that the band went through an incredible amount of personnel changes, both before and after I left," Bachman noted. "So when the idea of the reunion really got serious, Burt (Cummings) and I realized that of all the players who've come and gone, this lineup we're touring with now was like the superteam, or the all-stars, of the Guess Who. In fact, I think that (gui-

Tropical blooms for the late summer landscape

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

The late summer landscape can vary dramatically in appearance from year to year depending on the whim of Mother Nature. Lush, green and overgrown in some summers gone by, with slugs and fungal diseases the primary plagues, our landscapes have endured two consecutive seasons of late summer droughts leaving lawns and gardens parched and crispy and spider mites have emerged as the bug du jour.

Despite the dryness, opportunistic weeds seem to flourish in every season and this past week's welcome rainfall has only served to encourage their proliferation. Learning to recognize these intruders is an essential aspect of becoming a knowledgeable gardener. When in doubt, especially in the perennial border, it is sometimes best to allow questionable plants to remain until flowers appear, just in case they prove to be a forgotten gem or friendly offspring of a prized cultivar. At this time of year, biennial plants, including foxgloves and forget-me-nots, are popping up all over my borders and despite a somewhat weedy appearance, these will be allowed to remain and transplanted or thinned next spring.

Many of our most intrusive weeds, however, are beginning to disperse their seeds and every effort should be made to remove as many as possible in the weeks to come. Crabgrass is particularly troublesome and currently thriving with seed heads on the verge of erupting. Although its removal from an established lawn is often unrealistic by this time of year, try to pull or treat as much as possible in beds and borders. Make a note to use a pre-emergent crabgrass control next spring on your lawn should major patches be observed this summer.

The hardy Rose-of-Sharon (Hibiscus syriacus)

As I reluctantly abandoned my weedy gardens on a delightfully cool summer evening, I was greeted by the sweet perfume of angels' trumpets (Brugmansia) growing in a large container alongside my back walkway. Barely fragrant during the warmth of the day, the spectacular, pendent blossoms of this tender tropical produce an almost overpowering fragrance as evening approaches. The showy flowers may reach a length of up to 10 inches long ranging in color from pure, glistening white to glowing, golden yellow or apricot. Easily propagated from stem cuttings, a small 1-foot plant will grow remarkably quickly in one season to become a sizeable 5- to 6-foot shrubby tree bearing dozens of these sensational blossoms. If moved indoors before temperatures drop below 40 degrees, angels' trumpets may be grown as a houseplant and

Creating 'Simone'

For the new Al Pacino film, writer-director builds a better actress

By Ed Symkus
SENIOR STAFF WRITER

Andrew Niccol does not like talking to the press. Nor does he like discussing his films with the folks who buy tickets to see them. He's a shy man, perhaps a bit paranoid, who speaks softly in a lilting New Zealand accent and tries his best to avoid eye contact.

There's a scene in his new film, "Simone," in which a shy, paranoid director (played by Al Pacino) literally runs away from a gaggle of reporters at a press conference, his arms flapping.

"I do generally run away from the press," he says, acknowledging the comparison. "I just want the work to speak for itself. But I'm the writer-director-producer. So when a lot of the film is your fault, the studio wants you to go out and explain yourself."

His reason for running from audience members is a different story.

"I usually avoid Q&A after a screening because there are only two possibilities," he explains. "One is that they hate the film, which obviously is embarrassing. But more embarrassing for me is if they like the film. Because where I come from you're not supposed to take compliments well. Praise is embarrassing to us in New Zealand. In a strange way we prefer people to dislike things. It's perverse, isn't it?"

Some will say that his ideas for movies are perverse, too. He wrote "The Truman Show," the story of a man growing up and living in a completely false world, and he wrote and directed "Gattaca," in which a normal person tries to pass himself off as a genetically superior human. In "Simone," Niccol tackles the tale of a washed-up director who gets a new lease on his career when he's presented with a computer code that enables him to create a "perfect" actress on a screen, then put her in a film without letting on to actors, studio heads or a star-struck public. To put it lightly, things in this black satiric comedy about Hollywood go very wrong.

And when they do, Niccol has something wickedly nasty to say about everyone, from those studio heads to those fans.

Andrew Niccol admits there's a little bit of himself in the character played by Al Pacino — especially the part where Pacino runs screaming from the press.

Fresh tomato sauce with cream

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Nothing sounds simpler than a quick fresh tomato sauce with cream. What could go wrong? Well, for one, the tomatoes might be flavorless, the skins can quickly become unappetizing when cooked, garlic can be an odd partner with cream, and tomato seeds floating in sauce are not ideal. Of course, a heavy hand with the butter or cream can turn a fresh summer supper into a heavy, tasteless mess.

The first issue was the tomatoes. Do not make this recipe with anything but truly flavorful local tomatoes. Next, I found that peeling and seeding was, in fact, necessary but there is some good news. A quick bath in boiling water (only 30 seconds) was all that was needed to loosen the skin. A subsequent dunk in ice water turned out not to be necessary. As for coring and seeding, the easiest method is to cut away the four sides of the skinned tomato, leaving the thin, hard core intact. The seeds are then quickly removed with one◊s fingers.

Butter turned out to be better than olive oil for cooking since butter marries well with cream. Garlic, no matter how little I used and how I cooked it, was out of place. One half an onion finely diced and then lightly sautéed made for a better combination with the other ingredients. As for the cream, heavy cream beat out half and half or light cream for standing up to the tomatoes. However, a mere 1/4 cup was sufficient; larger quantities subdued the garden-fresh taste of the tomatoes.

Salt and black pepper were a must and 1/4 teaspoon ground nutmeg also worked well. Large pieces of torn basil added at the end worked nicely as a variation.

FRESH TOMATO SAUCE WITH CREAM AND NUTMEG

To peel the tomatoes, score each bottom with an X and plunge into boiling water for 30 seconds. Once cool enough to handle, the skin will peel away easily. To core and seed the tomatoes, slice away the four sides from the center core (cut from pole to pole, not across the tomato). Remove the seeds with your fingers.

2 tablespoons unsalted butter
1 cup finely diced onion, about 1/2 large onion
2 pounds fresh, ripe tomatoes, about 6 to 8 medium, peeled, cored, and seeded and cut into 1/2-inch dice
1/2 teaspoon salt plus extra for pasta cooking water
1/4 cup heavy cream
1/4 teaspoon ground nutmeg
Freshly ground black pepper to taste
1 pound pasta

1. Bring 4 quarts of salted water to a simmer. Heat butter over medium-low heat in a large skillet. When foam has subsided, add the onion and cook until very soft and just starting to turn blond, about 7 minutes. Add tomatoes, increase heat to medium, and cook until tomatoes have reduced to a chunky sauce, about 10 minutes. Add the heavy cream and nutmeg and cook until the sauce has thickened and the cream has lost its raw flavor, about a minute or two. Add salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste.

2. Meanwhile, cook the pasta until almost cooked. Reserve one cup of cooking water. Drain pasta and add to the skillet (or add back to the pot and then add the sauce to the pasta if your skillet is not large enough). Combine gently and simmer until pasta is al dente. Add a bit of reserved cooking water if necessary to thin sauce. Serve immediately. Serves 4 even with considerable neglect and very few leaves remaining at winter's end, the plant will quickly recover to bloom prolifically again the following season.

Equally dramatic in both stature and appearance are the vibrant-colored cannas bearing huge, paddle-shaped leaves and striking panicles of red, orange, yellow or rose-tinted flowers. Generally sold as dormant 'summer bulbs' at the nurseries in early spring, these rhizomatous, tropical-looking plants can be planted directly in the garden after all danger of frost has passed or grown in containers. The giant leaves may be deep green or tinted blue or bronze and several newer hybrids exhibit streaked foliage in shades of white, yellow, cream, orange and red. A personal favorite is 'Tropicana,' with leaves a stunning bronze striped with red and orange highlighted by brilliant orange-red flower spikes. Hybrids include dwarfs only 2- to 3-feet in height to giants over 6-feet tall. Once blackened by a killing frost, cut back the stems and the leaves and lift the rhizomes. Store in barely moist peat in a cool but frost-free environment.

The Hibiscus family offers numerous late summer bloomers to brighten a drought-stricken landscape. In addition to the flamboyant rose mallows (Hibiscus moscheutos) with their spectacular, broad circular blooms that produce clumps 5 feet around, the hardy Rose-of-Sharon (Hibiscus syriacus) provides weeks of nonstop blooms when few other trees or shrubs are flowering. The Rose-of-Sharon has been grown since colonial times and like its cousin, the mallow, it is late to break dormancy in the spring. Flowers may be single or double in shades of pink, red, white, red, purple or blue. Many selections exhibit contrasting-colored eyes. Each flower lasts only a day, but an established shrub will continue to produce innumerable elegant blooms from late July until frost.

Reaching a height of up to 15 feet at maturity, these summer-blooming shrubs, which can be trained to produce a small tree, will readily adapt to a wide range of growing conditions including part shade, city pollution, and seashore environments. Spring pruning is preferable as plants bloom on new wood. Delectable cultivars include 'Aphrodite' which demonstrates deep pink flowers accentuated by a red eye, 'Blue Bird,' an alluring, unique shade of lavender-blue blossoms highlighted by red eyezones, and 'Red Heart' which produces glistening white blooms, each with a ruby red center.

Do not confuse these hardy Hibiscuses with the tropical varieties (Hibiscus rosa- sinensis) which have shiny, deep-green leaves and require temperatures consistently above 50 degrees in order to survive. Their showy flowers, available in both single- and double-flowering forms may be varying shades of red, orange, yellow or white and are attractive to butterflies and hummingbirds. These magnificent tropical plants can be summered out-of-doors, but they must be relocated to a sunny window or greenhouse once cooler temperatures prevail in fall, several weeks prior to a killing frost.

tarist Donnie McDougall) and (bassist Bill Wallace) even played on more Guess Who albums than I did."

Bachman, now 58, admitted that some Guess Who alumni did attempt a previous reunion in 1983, but that it fizzled because some members still had, as he put it, "bad habits." He also mentioned that there was another major catalyst for the band's reunion back in 1999; besides the Guess Who's triumphant appearance at the Pan-Am Games, there was Lenny Kravitz's hit cover of "American Woman" racing up the charts.

"'American Woman' became a huge hit once again in '99 because of Lenny Kravitz's cover, and I think it made people only want to hear the original all the more, both old and new fans alike," Bachman said. When 'American Woman' was riding the charts for us back in 1970, we had actually planned what we called the American Woman Victory Tour, which was scrapped, of course, when I left the band under various circumstances. But as fate would have it, we finally got around to putting the tour on the road almost thirty years to the day later in May, 2000."

"On our current tour, we're doing what I call a well-balanced show, including lots of classic Guess Who material and a special section devoted to BTO which, in addition, allows Burt (Cummings) to take a break and give his voice a rest. There's also an all-acoustic set where we play four songs — 'Lookin' Out for No. 1,' 'No Sugar Tonight,' 'Let It Ride' and 'Undun.' We've got the show polished down to what really works, which for our fans is the old hits rather than a mix of those plus new songs. I know that when I go to see Crosby Still Nash & Young, for example, or any other classic-rock act, I want to hear mainly the old vintage songs rather than any new unfamiliar material. That's how I like to play it with my bands, to treat fans the way I would want to be treated," Bachman said.

Bachman added that fans of both the Guess Who and BTO can find information about both bands, plus schedules, photos, CDs, videos and other merchandise at randybachman.com.

The Guess Who will perform at the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset Saturday, Aug. 31 at 8 p.m. For more information call the music circus at (781) 383-1400.

"It's true, no one gets away scot-free in this film," he says. "But it's a gentle dig. It's an affectionate parody on all of us.

"Including myself," he adds with a laugh. "Because there's a pretentious director there, who's making pretentious art films. It's about the fans as well. Because we're so obsessed with celebrities, in this film the ultimate joke is that we're obsessed with a celebrity who doesn't exist. And I've always thought to myself, how real are so-called real celebrities anyway?"

More important, how real is the actress playing Simone? According to the credits at the end of the film, Simone is played by "Herself." So are we to believe Niccol and a gang of film wizards actually concocted a beautiful, smiling, shapely blonde woman out of pixels and mixed her in with Pacino and Catherine Keener and the rest of the cast?

Niccol hesitates only a moment, looking away briefly, knowing full well the "secret" is going to come out soon anyway. The secret being that Simone is played by Canadian model Rachel Roberts, in her first film role.

"But there's more than just Rachel in Simone," he says, referring to the fact that small bits of other actresses have been computer-generated into her looks and voice as part of the film's plot.

And he admits that the Screen Actors Guild initially made some noise when they heard the rumor that he wasn't using a real actress in the part.

"I think the Screen Actors Guild overreacted," he says. "They didn't bother me directly, but they contacted the studio, and people contacted my casting director and said, 'What have you done? You've turned your back on actors.' But of course a hundred actors work beside the artificial one. If it wasn't a film about an artificial actor, a lot of actors would be out of a job."

Niccol has had his share of problems with all of the films he's worked on, usually with the studios. He's publicly stated that Columbia "didn't know what they had" with 'Gattaca.' And just before "The Truman Show" was released he said he "wasn't sure" if Paramount knew what they had.

He doesn't comment on New Line, the company releasing "Simone," but he does confess that "I don't make it easy for studios. I tend to have expensive ideas that are also somewhat unconventional. And that doesn't sit well with studios to begin with. Take 'The Truman Show,' for example. Where do you put that on the video shelf? The marketing people look at my films and go, 'What are we supposed to do with this, Andrew?'

He laughs again and adds, "Maybe if I keep going at this long enough, they'll put it in a Niccol section."

"Simone" opens on Aug. 23.

MAKE SURE A LEFT TURN ISN'T A TURN FOR THE WORSE

Turning Left – Cars or trucks turning left in front of an oncoming motorcycle cause many crashes. It is often difficult for a driver to see a motorcycle coming through traffic and judge the motorcyclist's speed. Before making a left turn, look twice at an approaching motorcycle and make sure it is safe to proceed.

Whether you're a new or experienced rider, take a Motorcycle Safety Course. And when you're behind the wheel, remember…

CHECK TWICE - SAVE A LIFE

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 28
A 90-degree alignment of the Taurus moon and Jupiter this morning warns against overdoing or going to extremes. Avoid making major purchases, decisions, commitments. In the afternoon the moon aligns with Neptune, generating an easygoing, laidback mood. It may be difficult to focus on practical matters. If you are working, finish old projects and handle routine chores. Enjoy good food, music, conversation with loved ones this evening.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 29
The planet Mars enters Virgo at 10:38 a.m., remaining there until October 15. The moon continues active travel in Taurus all day. Make up a list of things to do, and you can be most productive. Streamline your workload; don't make any more commitments until the backlog has been cleared.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 30
At 12:44 a.m. the Taurus moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive. The moon enters Gemini at 7:45 a.m. and aligns with Mars at 8:55 a.m. Stay alert and use common sense. Storm clouds move out by 10:00 a.m., and the green light for new beginnings goes on. Harmonious lunar alignments to Mercury and Jupiter generate an upbeat, social mood. The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 10:31 p.m. Don't be a hermit tonight. This is a wonderful evening for partying.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 31
Planetary action makes this day prime for initiating new beginnings, particularly in your personal life. It also brings a time to reassess progress toward future goals and explore new options or alternatives. Communications get the green light; get in touch with friends you haven't spoken to in a while. Chat, network, collaborate. Let fun and games top your agenda this evening.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 1
Take advantage of favorable planetary influences during the first few days of September; plan to launch important activities, sign contracts, make long-range plans and commitments. A Mercury retrograde period will begin to take effect the second week of September, bringing a change of pace and priorities.
The combination of a Gemini moon and Mercury/Jupiter alignment generates an upbeat mood today. Planetary action rates high across the board. The green light is on for new starts. The Gemini moon becomes inactive at 12:55 p.m. until 5:14 p.m., when a Cancer moon takes over.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 2
The moon travels in Cancer, highlighting family activities. Spend quality time with loved ones. In addition, an applying alignment of Venus and Uranus generates a restless mood, making this a great day for vacationing. Be more adventurous; open to new experiences. Spur of the moment ideas can be the most successful. Forget your troubles and go for the good times:

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 3
It may be difficult to get back to business and practical matters today. A Venus/Uranus alignment occurs at 11:39 a.m. People will be upbeat, outgoing, cooperative. The Cancer moon continues active travel until 4:31 p.m. The moon enters playful Leo at 10:36 p.m.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 4
Today's planetary combination continues to generate high spirits, optimism. The green light is on for new starts across the board. It is best to launch important enterprises before 10:52 a.m., when the Leo moon aligns with expansive Jupiter. A Mercury/Neptune alignment stimulates creative thinking, intuition. Trust your first impression; your instincts are on target. Be sure to take time out for fun and games; enjoy favorite sports, hobbies, friends.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 5
The moon continues to travel in Leo. However, a harmonious alignment of Venus and Saturn adds an element of realism and practicality to today's planetary picture. This morning is prime for making commitments to others, selling or buying property or handling major business transactions. Plan to initiate before 10:26 a.m., when this alignment occurs. Lunar contacts to Saturn and Venus set the stage for a romantic evening. The Leo moon becomes inactive at 9:33 p.m.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 6
Storm clouds move in, making for a day that has its pitfalls. Others may be moody, distracted, depressed. Don't overpersonalize. Plan a busy work schedule. Finish projects already begun, review and redo, clean and reorganize. At 12:16 a.m. the moon enters Virgo, and aligns with Mars at 8:21 a.m. Choose your words carefully. Compliments will work better than criticism. The new moon culminates at 11:10 p.m., 14-degrees of Virgo.

Mon. 2

Project Arts of Plymouth presents the Compass Bank Free Summer Concert Series. Research that inspires hope

National Alliance for Autism Research

NAAR is the first national non-profit organization dedicated to funding and accelerating biomedical research to unlock the mysteries of autism spectrum disorders and find a cure. The Walk F.A.R. (family & friends for autism research) for NAAR walkathon is NAAR's signature fund-raising and autism awareness event. Last year, 3,500 walkers in New England raised nearly a half million dollars for this important cause. For all those touched by autism, research offers hope. Please join us for:

'Hills of Hull' house tour

On Saturday, Sept. 28, there will be a unique opportunity to tour seven private homes tucked away in special locations in the neighborhoods of Hull to benefit Wellspring, a community-based human service organization serving Hull and surrounding towns.

Each of these 'Hills of Hull' homes is perched high on one of the town's many hills and captures a commanding view of the open ocean, harbor and even the Boston skyline. These lovely vistas also include Worlds End, and many of the islands of Boston Harbor, depending on which property is being visited.

Called "The Hills of Hull," the tour will be held between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. Advance tickets may be purchased for $20 prior to Aug. 28 at the following locations: Bookport, Hingham; Cards & Shards, Cohasset; and Mermaids in Hull. Tickets may also be purchased by sending a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Wellspring, 814 Nantasket Ave., Hull 02045 with an enclosed check.

The day of the tour tickets may be purchased for $25 at the Hull Town Hall. Further information about the tour is available by calling the staff at Wellspring at 781-925-3211.

Wellspring serves many towns throughout the South Shore. It is financed by income from its thrift shop, community donations and private grants.

Toys, kids' clothes for benefit yard sale

Our World, the children's global discovery museum, needs your gently used children's clothes and toys along with children's books, videos, baby equipment and furniture for a Sept. 21 yard sale.

The museum is set to open in Cohasset in the fall of 2003 in a two-story wing of the former Joseph Osgood School. The $1 million project will include an associated global-themed playground.

The yard sale will take place from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. on Saturday, Sept. 21, in the Cohasset Town Hall auditorium.

Children's items can be dropped off at the auditorium from 9:30 a.m.-6:30 p.m. on Thursday, Sept. 19, and from 9:30 a.m.-2:30 p.m. on Friday, Sept. 20. Donations will be welcome from all nearby towns.

Yard sale chairman Kelly Ziff needs at least 20 volunteers to help receive, sort, price, display and sell the goods. Contact her at 781-383-0225.

Buttonwood hosts children's author

Marie-Louise Gay will visit Buttonwood Books in Cohasset on Wed. Sept. 25 from 3- 4:30 p.m.. Gay has won innumerable awards for her children's books and is the author/illustrator of the best-selling Stella series ("Stella, Fairy of the Forest", "Stella, Queen of the Snow" and "Stella, Star of the Sea"). Gay has the wonderful ability to create "attitude" with a few strokes of her pen and is equally clever with words. She is a frequent visitor to schools in Canada and enjoys working with children. Her presentation will include an interactive drawing activity which Buttonwood's young friends won't want to miss! Please call 781-383-2665 for additional information or to order your signed copy if unable to attend. Free

Piano lessons

Priscilla D. Daniels, professional pianist and teacher of pianoforte, resumes her lesson schedule at her Beach Street home in Cohasset. Her personalized instruction has attracted students who have had careers in music, while others play just for pleasure.

Mrs. Daniels is a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music of Boston, magna cum laude. She is a member of Alpha Chi Omega, national sorority, and Pi Kappa Lambda, honorary professional society. She has taught in Swampscott, Lincoln, Norwood, and currently in Cohasset.

As part of each lesson she incorporates music theory, harmony, rhythm study and expression. She encourages her students to improvise and compose, and strives to communicate a love and appreciation for the fine arts through the medium of the piano.

For further information, call 383-1487.

Big Band concerts

Hull Memorial Park is the venue for three Sunday afternoon concerts in Hull to entertain the community with Big Band favorites for the sixth summer in a row. Sponsored by the Pyne Keohane Funeral Home of Hingham, "Music at the Gazebo" concerts will take place at the Veterans' Memorial Park in Hull on Sept. 8, 15, and 22.

A special ceremony to honor all those who died last year during the attack on America will precede the Sept. 8 opening performance. A plaque, in memory of those who lost their lives Sept. 11, 2001 will be presented to the War Memorial Commission for placement on the gazebo. Kristen Hertzenberg, an opera performance student at the Longy Conservatory of Music will then sing the national anthem a capella. The concert will open with some patriotic-themed tunes sung by Hertzenberg and accompanied by the featured concert band, The South Shore Stompers.

The program will run from 3-4:30 p.m. on the second, third and fourth Sundays in September. The performance schedules include:

- Sept. 8 — The South Shore Stompers playing Dixieland jazz and swing
- Sept. 15 — The Gregg Savage Quintet featuring swing and Big Band tunes
- Sept. 22 — The Pastels, featuring Big Band and Broadway show tunes.

The park is at the intersection of Nantasket and Samoset Avenues across from the Hull Donut House. Free parking is available at the Hull Redevelopment Authority in the adjacent lot. Concert-goers should bring their own seating. Performances will be cancelled if it rains.

Solemn 9-11 observance is planned

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Cohasset is planning a quiet, respectful observance of the anniversary of the 9-11 tragedy next Wednesday.

Starting at 8:45 a.m., the time the first plane hit the World Trade Center, churches will toll their bells until 9:03 a.m., when the second plane hit. Then a moment of silence will be observed followed by the playing of taps.

Honor guards from Cohasset police and fire departments, the local American Legion and VFW posts will be at the flagpole on the Common.

All local clergy is expected to be present and the public is invited to attend.

"I think it's important we don't forget what happened," said Selectman Merle Brown. "But we want a quiet observance out of respect for those who lost their lives."

— Selectman Merle Brown.

Brown, who would like to see the observance become an annual event, suggests that people, who would like to do so, may bring flowers to be placed at the foot of the flagpole that morning.

Historical Society museums up for listing on register

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The Capt. John Wilson House and the Cohasset Maritime Museum in Cohasset Village have long been considered historic sites by local residents.

Soon, however, that local distinction could be back up by national recognition.

The two buildings, both owned and operated as museums by the Cohasset Historical Society, are up for review by the Massachusetts Historical Commission on Sept. 11. The review is a major step towards the sites being listed on the National Register of Historic Places. Cohasset Central Cemetery will also be reviewed for inclusion that day.

"Well, It was time for it to happen, put it that way," said local historian David Wadsworth. "The National Register program – and I have done a number of nominations from Cohasset – is something that's quite selective. There are probably a lot of areas and properties in the town that deserve to be on the national register, because we have quite a rich history here."

Inclusion on the National Register is largely ceremonial, but there are some major advantages. Most important is protection from federally-funded projects.

"We're not quite as old as Hingham or Scituate or Hull, but we still have a lot of old houses and a lot of historical districts," said Wadsworth. "I have worked for the historical society for 22 years and it's about time we put them on the register. I'd say it's overdue."

The Wilson House dates to 1810 and has been in the possession of the historical society since 1936. According to the

MCAS test results don't show the whole picture

Study challenges reliance on test

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

If MCAS was a high school student, it wouldn't win any popularity contests.

It's no secret that many school districts bemoan the Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System, which is an outgrowth of the 1993 Education Reform Act. And many students, especially 10th-graders who must pass the test in order to graduate, are understandably anxious about their performance.

But, across the state, schools have readjusted the so-called "education frameworks" or curriculum guidelines so the same grades are studying the same subject areas no matter what town they may be housed in. The intent of MCAS is to measure student, school and district performance against that curriculum.

It's now MCAS time again, meaning each district's results from tests administered last spring will soon become public. Those results may not tell the whole story, but, in fact, may only be revealing how well teachers are "teaching to the test," warns a new study.

Enter the Beacon Hill Institute, a public policy research group based at Suffolk University, which after studying MCAS has issued a detailed report saying the test results may not be a barometer for how the Education Reform Act is faring after all. As a result of the legislation, total net school state spending rose from $4.3 billion in 1993 to $7.3 billion in 2001, according to the report. The state now funds 41 percent of education spending as compared with 30 percent in 1993, when Education Reform began.

Beacon Hill Institute's findings cast doubt on the value of relying on MCAS scores to measure school performance, according to David Tuerck, an author of the report and chairman of Suffolk University's Economics Department.

"Has pumping more money into the schools created a return in the form of better-educated young citizens, as measured by good performance on the MCAS test?" the report asks.

The report finds that more money does not translate into improved performance, but prior performance on standardized tests, intangible factors such as accountability, and socioeconomic factors do play a role. BHI has come up with a model to determine how school districts are educating their students in light of those factors.

Tuerck said he'd like the report to accomplish two things:

• Provide people with a sense that the state needs to look hard at how it is using education reform money in order to

Uncommon benches

The Cohasset Common Historic District Commission isn't happy with Town Manager Mark Haddad's decision to take the placement of two new benches into his own hands.

The CCHDC voted back in May to allow the benches be placed temporarily directly in front of Town Hall on the grassy area under the trees near the mailbox. The commission wanted them off the common side out of concern for safety of senior citizens because children play Frisbee and soccer there.

But despite being reminded of the terms of the CCHDC certificate, Haddad placed the benches where he originally wanted them facing the duck pond under the trees near Long Road [where the farmers market is held].

The CCHDC wanted to hold off on the benches altogether until the architects complete the Common Landscape Master Plan, but agreed on the bench placement near Town Hall after being approached by Haddad the second time.

The commission says Haddad has violated the CCHDC bylaws.

"All residents of the common must adhere to these bylaws and it should be expected that the body responsible for the law in this town would exemplify this same responsibility," the commission wrote in an Aug. 26 memo to selectmen.

Haddad said he was just "trying to do the right thing" and asked the CCHDC for their input and approval.

But he explained placing the benches by Town Hall "just didn't make sense" because they are not really on the common. He said senior citizens have approached him about the need for benches and the new ones have been used all summer.

The CCHDC asked selectmen to resolve the issue, which is likely to come up at their Sept. 10 meeting

How to vote by absentee ballot

Absentee ballots for the State Primary on Sept. 17, are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime on Monday, Sept. 16, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. You may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

1. Absence from the town during the hours the polls is open.
2. Physical disability.
3. Religious beliefs, which prevent voting at the polls on Election Day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, which ballot is requested, Democrat, Republican, Libertarian, or Massachusetts Green Party, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant. A voter must vote in the party that he is enrolled. However, unenrolled voters who pull a ballot at the State Primary do not become enrolled members of that party and do not need to complete a charge of enrollment card — they remain unenrolled. Voters enrolled in a political designation may not take a ballot at the State Primary.

A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absentee voter; sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by Sept. 17, 2002 to be counted.

The town will be using the Accu-Vote optical scan system. Instructions to voters are printed on the ballot and any pen or pencil may be used. To vote, completely fill in the oval to the right of your choice. Secrecy sleeves are available at the check in tables. The ballots an be inserted into the machine face up, face down, etc. and will be read. It is the usual policy to flip the ballot over so the blank side shows as they insert it into the machine. Voters who are uncomfortable with this should use the secrecy sleeve.

If you are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast your vote at the polling place, you may file a letter from your physician with your town clerk, stating that you are permanently unable to cast your vote at the polling place because of physical disability. A completed application for an absentee ballot for you to sign and return will be mailed to you by the town clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

One-time meter connection charge

The Water Commission has adopted a new System Development Charge to help fund its continuing water system improvements program.

"The System Development Charge is a one-time charge imposed on a new metered connection to the water distribution system," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission. "This new charge will not affect existing Water Department customers, but will help to reduce the amount of any future rate increases."

The amount of the charge is $2,300 for a new one-inch meter and increases proportionately with the size of the meter.

"The charge was calculated consistent with American Water Works Association methods for determining System Development Charges," McNabb said.

"We expect this charge to raise about $1,000,000 over the next 20 years," which will help to pay for the increased capacity of the water system which is required because of new demands placed on the system by new metered connections," he said.

The new charge does not apply to replacements of existing meters with a meter of the same or lesser size. The System Development Charge was adopted by the Water Commission at its Aug. 22 meeting and was filed with the Town Clerk on Aug. 23, when it became effective.

Village brick-style sidewalks preferred

Now, how about burying the wires?

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Cohasset residents want something different under their feet and it's not new, high-tech soles on expensive sneakers.

According to results of the village sidewalk survey, most respondents favor some type of brick surface material for sidewalks as opposed to asphalt or cement.

Next on the agenda will be for local residents to decide if they want something different overhead: whether to bury utility wires in all or part of the village.

The choice is significant because, despite considerable grant money, more funds would be needed to put the wires underground and have brick-style sidewalks. In other words, it may be impossible to do both without more private and or public fund-raising.

The sidewalk survey is apart of the ongoing Village Revitalization Project nearly 10 years in the making but which is now expected to come to fruition thanks to $1.7 million in state grants. The MBTA will also kick in $500,000 to refurbish the town parking lot as mitigation for the Greenbush line.

The survey that started last spring included actual samples of sidewalk material installed in a display along James Walkway between the village gas station and Cards and Shards that runs from the town parking lot to South Main Street. Passersby and other interested citizens were invited to fill out a survey form indicating what their sidewalk preferences were.

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, in coordination with the Board of Selectmen, conducted the study. The town contributed $1,000 to help construct the display area. The CRC is a private entity sponsored by local business owners including Peter Roy of Margin Street, who owns Kimball's, Atlantica and the Olde Salt House, and other interested citizens.

Survey results will be provided to the Waterfield Design Group — the firm hired by the town to complete the design and construction documents for the village improvements. Copies of completed surveys are available for review at the Selectmen's office at Town Hall or the CRC office, 87 Elm St.

The survey also asked for preferences for crosswalk surface material and style of lighting fixtures.

The display area for the survey consisted of six sample sidewalks, three light fixtures and two display boards showing samples of streetscape design options used in other communities, said Dean Rizzo, executive director of the CRC.

Rizzo said 244 people took part in the survey.

"The majority (80 percent) of those who responded indicated a preference for a brick-style surface material for sidewalks, crosswalks with a surface material that is different from asphalt (granite or brick preferred), and a Colonial-style lighting fixture," he said.

Rizzo described the results as a "good random sampling."

"The results should weigh in significantly in the overall decision-making process about what type of materials are preferred," he said.

He found the low preference for concrete sidewalks, which are used in Hingham Square and Scituate Harbor, surprising.

"Concrete sidewalks were pretty low in choice level" although concrete is cheaper, said Rizzo, noting brick conveys a warmer feeling.

However, if the town decides to bury the utility wires in the village (expected to cost upwards of $1 million), it may not be able to do brick sidewalks without more money either from the town, private fund-raising or both.

"We have grant money to do the infrastructure needed," Rizzo said. "The utility work is the wild card."[Last winter an article seeking authorization for a surcharge on residents' utility and cable-TV bills to pay for underground wires was withdrawn prior to Town Meeting due to lack of support. The Planning Board and selectmen were opposed to assessing surcharges].

Timothy O'Brien, chairman of the Village Revitalization Task Force, a town board, said he was pleased a majority of survey respondents opted for brick.

"We recommended brick as a task force as well and that made me feel good that the community feels the same way," O'Brien said.

When complete, Rizzo said the improvements, which will blend in with the general character, might not "jump out at you," but people will notice a nice environment and a nice feel to the village.

"Having new sidewalks with nice granite curbing, a reduction in the amount of asphalt, additional greenspace, new lighting, the possible removal of overhead utility lines, and restructured rear parking area will provide very noticeable changes to the downtown environment," he said. "The key is to make sure these improvements blend in with the character and nature of the existing environment so that the changes not only make the village a more pedestrian-friendly environment, but they also remove the tired look that exists today and brings back a new sense of energy and vibrancy to the area."

A passerby takes a look at the display showing village design options along the James Brook Walkway in the village. Results of the survey on sidewalk surface materials, lighting fixtures and types of crosswalks have been tabulated and are available in the Selectmen's Office at Town Hall.

Bank to move to old Bergson's building

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Fleet Bank is moving across the street in Cohasset. The branch at 772 Chief Justice Cushing Highway [at the far end of Tedeschi Plaza] is moving to 765 CJC Highway at the entrance to Shaw's Plaza.

Jim Schepker, Fleet spokesman, said the bank originally intended to renovate its current location until the larger site across the street became available.

"It's a much larger site with better access," he said. "We hope to open by late October, early November."

The former Bergson's restaurant building [which more recently housed Newport Creamery] is 3300 square feet.

Architect Don Lonergan said the exterior character of the building will stay the same, but the interior is undergoing extensive renovations.

"It's going to be a beautiful, full-service branch," he said.

Schepker said to whom the bank will sublet its soon-to-be former location to is "unresolved as yet."

He said the new branch, which will be a "banking and investment center," will be "state-of-the-art."

"It will have sophisticated technology and be staffed by a number of investment specialists," Schepker said.

The new branch will be open Monday through Saturday.

Fleet Bank's move into the building closes a chapter at the site, which has been empty when Newport Creamery filed for bankruptcy protection in September 2001 and closed 19 of its under-performing restaurants including the one in Cohasset.

Solemn 9-11 observance is planned

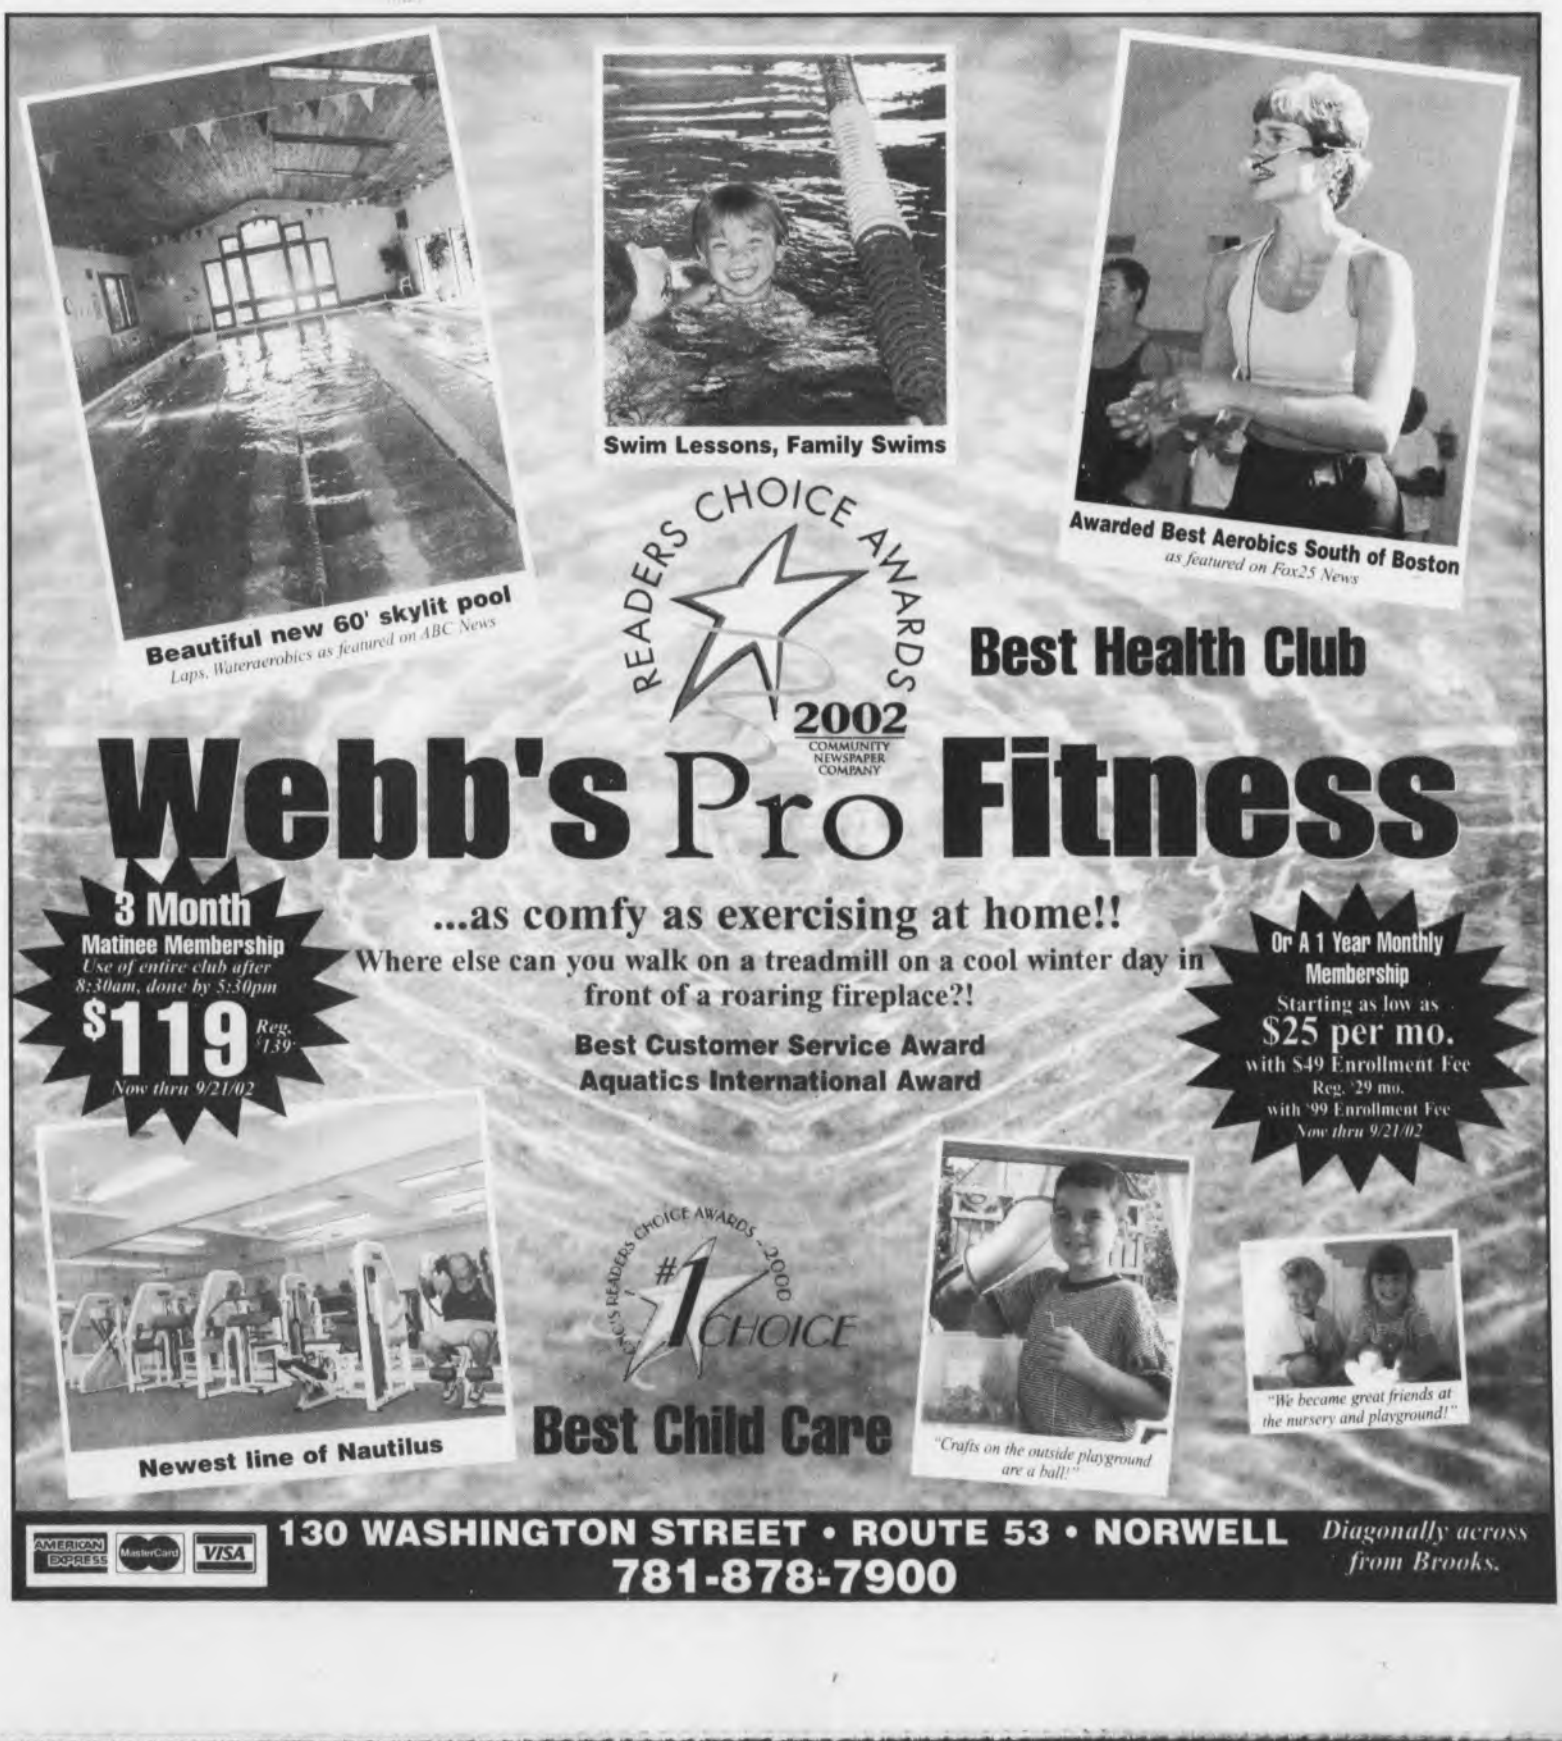
of observing the 9-11 anniversary at their last meeting. Brown and Town Manager Mark Haddad met with members of the local clergy to determine how best to honor the victims and the country.

The decision was made that there would be no public speeches.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said the town wanted to do something to acknowledge the day.

"We wanted to plan something very low key," he said, noting the schools could participate by also observing a moment of silence..

"We want to have a very simple observance yet acknowledge the tragedy and the impact it has had on so many people and the country as a whole," Sullivan said.



Community Preservation Act makes museum work possible

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Not only is the Capt. John Wilson House under consideration for the National Register of Historic Places, it is also about to undergo a facelift.

The Wilson house is scheduled for a major renovation to repair extensive water damage. The Wilson House as well as the other Historical Society building in the village, the Maritime Museum, will also both be equipped with handicapped access.

"(The renovation) is principally focused at the Wilson house," said Historical Society member Tom Gruber. It started with the sill beams under the floors at the Wilson house, which had become quite rotten as a result of water damage over the years. You can actually peer down under the building through holes in the floor."

The project is also special, because it represents the first tangible use of the Community Preservation Committee's fund.

"We applied for some grant money to help the Society, but we were denied at least one of the grants because we didn't have handicapped access," said Gruber. "The Historical Society hired a restoration architect to look at the handicapped access last year. That process taught us enough to know that this is a major project. When the Community Preservation Act was passed, it gave us an opportunity to see if the Community Preservation Committee would support us in this project."

The CPC was more than receptive to the project, earmarking $150,000 for the project out of the new fund. That figure later passed at town meeting. The CPA fund can be used for open space, affordable housing, or historical preservation.

"It's actually a perfect application of CPC funds," said CPC Chairman Stuart Ivimey. "In fact it is one of the projects being monitored closely by the Community Preservation Coalition, which is the group of people who advocated the formation of the Community Preservation Act. It is one of their premier projects. It is an ideal application – it's exactly what the law was intended to accomplish."

"It is an ideal application – it's exactly what the law was intended to accomplish."
— Stuart Ivimey, CPC chairman

Ivimey was pleased that his committee's work was coming to fruition.

"I think it is terrific," said Ivimey. "The Wilson House project is a great example of what this law is supposed to do. It's great that we are able to make this quality contribution to the downtown area at a time when there is a large effort to improve the aesthetics of that area, by being able to help restore these much loved antique buildings in the heart of the Village."

The CPC fund is derived from a 1.5 percent real estate tax surcharge, which is then matched by the state at a percentage that varies from year to year. Ivimey expects the state to fully match the town's contribution.

The project will progress in three phases — restoration for the Wilson house, water infiltration prevention measures and handicapped access.

"One of the reasons that there was so much deterioration is because it is built into the ledge," said Gruber. "One component is to rebuild and another one is to try and do something about the water infiltration."

After the renovations are done, the Society will proceed with building the handicapped access.

"We want to be as prudent as we can with the CPC funds," said Gruber. "The further we can make the money go, the better off we'll all be."

The Historical Society has hired Power and Company of Boston to plan the project.

"Powers and Company is in the process of doing their analytical work right now," said Gruber. "They asked us to have the building empty by Labor Day. Before we can start we have to be forensic analysts, deconstructing parts of the building to see the extent of the underground damage.

The Historic Society is hoping to have the recommendations from Power and Company by late fall. In the interim, Gruber wants to make sure that the public is well-informed as to the progress of the project.

"If anybody wants to come in and see what we are doing, just call the historical society," said Gruber. "We'd be glad to give a private showing to anyone, since the buildings close on Labor Day. We want to make sure it is accessible for people to see."

Historical Society museums up for listing on register

Cohasset Historical Society's pamphlet, it "illustrates a Cohasset home of the early and middle 19th century." The building is about to be refurbished, thanks to money from the Community Preservation Fund (See sidebar).

The Maritime Museum is even older, dating back to the 18th century (the precise year is not known) was home to Samuel Bates' ship chandlery (a marine supply store) in the mid-1700s and is one of the last surviving commercial buildings from that era.

However, the Maritime Museum was moved from its Border Street location to where its sits in the Village today in 1957, which provided a barrier in terms of its eligibility for listing on the National Register.

"Normally, the National Register excludes buildings that have been moved, it will not accept them," said Wadsworth. "There are exceptions to that criteria. One of the exceptions is that it be an outstanding example of, and the only example of, something important."

It was because of this rule, however, that initially the society decided to apply for status as an historic district, which allows some flexibility.

"Originally, we made out the application not for individual listings, but as a historic district of two structures," said Tom Gruber. "The criteria for an historic district is less stringent. The idea is that in a district, it is the collection of structures that is important, even though there may be some intervening structures that don't comply."

But the history and architecture of the structure made that move unnecessary.

"When the Massachusetts Historical Commission got involved and did their due diligence and stated looking at the property, they though that they were so important that they could be individually listed," said Gruber. "It's one of the last surviving commercial buildings from the 1700s in the state, and it's 95 percent intact, even though it has been moved."

The Cohasset Historical Society museums on Elm Street in the village are up for listing on the National Register of Historic places.

The visiting team from the Massachusetts Historical Commission pointed out two architectural anomalies that made the structure of the Maritime Museum unique.

"I have worked for the historical society for 22 years and it's about time we put them on the register. I'd say it's overdue."
— David Wadsworth, historian

"The structure uses a King Truss," said Gruber. "A horizontal beam goes from front to back of the roof, and there is a vertical post that goes up the hip roof," said Gruber, explaining that a hip roof is a four-sided roof. "The King Post rises from that beam to where the side and front and back surfaces meet."

The other unusual architectural feature in the Maritime Museum is the presence of diagonal cross braces.

"There is a big robust beam that lines the tops of the walls (where the roof meets the walls)," said Gruber. "At the top of the wall there are diagonal braces. And those also have a little beam that goes back into the corner."

Now, under the recommendation of the Massachusetts Historical Commission, the buildings are being proffered as individual structures on the same application. At this point, all the Historical Society can do is wait.

"It's our business to make sure that the state people like it," said Wadsworth. "And then state people get a hold of it and it is their business to try and make sure that the federal people in Washington — the National Parks Service — that they like it. It has to go into Washington with the nomination done at a professional level. So, we do the initial work as volunteers, the professionals finish it up in Boston, and put it onto Parks Service forms and then it goes through the review board after everybody is all through with it up there."

Given the rigorous process that the application has gone through just to get to this point, though, Wadsworth feels confident that the state review board will approve the application.

"I can say that there is probably a 99.99 percent chance that it will (pass muster)," said Wadsworth. "It takes some time for them to polish it up after it goes through the review board and then they send it off to the National Park Service in Washington, who administer the register of historic places. Then the keeper of the National Register has a certain time limit to approve it."

Other properties in Cohasset on the National Register are the Cohasset Common Historic District, Government Island, the Caleb Lothrop House on Summer Street and the Walter Gropius House off Atlantic Avenue.

There are about 75,000 listings that make up the National Register.

The architects' rendering of the Greek Church on Jerusalem Road with the new addition to the left of the steeple. The same masonry details will be employed on the addition that were used in the existing building. Groundbreaking for the new addition is Sunday, Sept. 8.

Greek Church addition groundbreaking Sunday

Old Parish House sold, to be moved

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The Nativity-Assumption of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church on Jerusalem Road in Cohasset has been growing. From a few families in the mid-1980s to more than 250 families presently, the congregation's expansion has now prompted the church to add a community center addition.

The ground-breaking for the $1.5 million dollar addition to the existing church will be celebrated with a vesper service on Saturday Sept. 7 at 7 p.m., followed by a liturgy and the ground-breaking at 9 a.m. on Sunday, Sept. 8.

"We have grown so that we have over 100 children in our Sunday school at present and we are now operating out of a house we call it the Parish House," said Ed Lofgren, who handles publicity for the church. "But we have sold that and it is going to be moved down Route 228 to another location and the gentleman is going to use it as a house. And we will just add on the community center to the existing church, using part of the same lot that the parish house is on at present."

Father John G. Maheras addressed his excitement in a letter to the congregation at the start of the fund-raising effort.

"The Parishioners of the Panagia Church have waited patiently and endured uncomfortable conditions for many years with the old Parish House," said Maheras in the letter. "The new Community Center opens up an entire new dimension for all of us with benefits that are endless. The facility will definitely give us a sense of pride and the opportunity to offer so much to so many."

The addition will just about double the size of the church, allowing the congregation to more comfortably house its operations.

"We have approximately 250 families in the congregation and they are all over the South Shore, primarily from Hull, Cohasset, Scituate, Norwell, Hanover," said Lofgren. "There will be a youth focus, no question about it, because that is where our growth is with the young people, but on the other hand we want to provide a function hall for not only the community at large but also for weddings, receptions, baptisms, it will be a small function hall it will only accommodate a couple of hundred people, but nevertheless it will serve some useful functions. We'll have meeting places, lots of them, we'll have a nice library where the church can keep archives and things of that nature."

The idea has been floated around for about 10 years, but only in the last two years has it taken shape.

"We know have enough money to start," said Lofgren. "We have about one-third of what we need to go ahead and put up a shell and we have talked to other leading donors who will hopefully come up with the rest. We need $1.5 million we have about one-third of that.

The addition will help house the church's expanding community and youth programs.

"We do more and more community type things as of late and work more and more with our young people. We are seeing more and more functions so this community center will be a welcome addition.

The church has an interesting history, from its start as a family memorial, to its purchase by the Methodist Church. The Greek Orthodox congregation now owns the property.

"The Pope family built it in the 1920s as a memorial to a young man in the family who had passed away from drowning I believe," said Lofgren. "He was a teenager, a young teenager, and he drowned. And the family erected this, I don't know if you could call it a church at that point, but a memorial to the young man."

Lofgren is excited to see the project come to light.

"It will surely enhance spiritual life," said Lofgren. "We will be able to do so much more."

MCAS test results don't show the whole picture

improve learning and school performance

• For teachers and principals across the state to look at schools that have done well and poorly in the report and learn what does and doesn't work in terms of improving school performance.

BHI uses variables such as teachers' average salary; expenditures on non-instructional items (including administration, athletics, transportation, maintenance and health); expenditures on management (principals and vice principals); and the student-teacher ratio (with lower ratios requiring increased spending and permitting reductions in class size) as indicators of education policy, and determined if these variables had a positive, negative or no effect on MCAS test results.

Then it uses the following variables: property values within a district; participation rate in the free/reduced price lunch program (an indicator of poverty level); proportion of single mothers under 18; proportion of students in the public schools and the drop-out rate for 10th graders.

BHI also included the district's 1994 MEAP (Massachusetts Educational Assessment Program) scores into the mix and applied the model to 2001 MCAS test scores. MEAP was the predecessor to MCAS. BHI provides rankings for schools according to whether and to what extent their actual performance on exceeds their predicted performance.

For example, fourth-graders in Petersham ranked 22 on actual 2001 MCAS test results, but considering socioeconomic and other factors, did the best job in outperforming the model's predictions and therefore was ranked first out of 266 districts by BHI, the report states.

"Has pumping more money into the schools created a return in the form of better-educated young citizens, as measured by good performance on the MCAS test?"

Cohasset does well on the BHI education model for students in the advanced or proficient categories of the English-Math 2001 MCAS tests, with fourth-, eighth- and 10th-graders ranked 16th, 21st, and eighth respectively. [Raw MCAS ranking was 6, 11, and 6), again out of 266 districts.

BHI ranked Hingham's fourth- eighth-, and 10th-graders in the same category as 93rd, 111th, and 45th (Raw 2001 MCAS scores were 25, 39, and 36). Hingham's results indicate it may not be doing as well as it should in light of its demographics, according to BHI.

Some poorer districts, such as Chelsea and Everett, on the BHI ranking showed huge gains over their MCAS ranking, because even with low scores they outperformed the BHI model.

Some affluent districts, like Wellesley and Lexington, did far worse.

"If MCAS is about more than just passing but is also about how much you've learned, then there's a trade off between getting students to do well and getting students to pass," Tuerck said.

The purpose of this study, however, is to determine which variables do the best job of explaining and predicting MCAS test scores, he said.

"Once we know what those variables are, and the direction in which they work, we can help policy makers fashion an education policy that will improve MCAS scores, if that is their goal," Tureck said.

The entire report and school rankings are on line at www.beaconhill.org.

TOP SAILOR

When it comes to sailing, Keegan Flynn seems to be following in his brother Andrew's footsteps. Keegan, age 10, is a member of the Wild Harbor Yacht Club in North Falmouth and sails an optimist. This summer he competed in many regattas sailing his optimist in the white fleet. At the New Bedford Jr. Regatta he placed second in his fleet, the Hyannis Regatta second place and at the Beverly Jr. Regatta fourth place. In the Buzzards Bay Optimist Series, Keegan placed first at Quisset Yacht Club, second at Megansett Yacht Club and Wild Harbor Yacht Club and third at Chappoquoct Yacht Club. He finished the series in second place overall for the white fleet. Keegan also finished in fifth place for the SMSA Grand Prix Optimist Championship. Congratulations Keegan. Your family, friends and Cohasset are very proud of your accomplishments!

ARTS DIRECTOR

The American Academy in Rome has appointed Cohasset High School and Skidmore College graduate Dana Prescott as Andrew Heiskell Arts Director. Dana is an art educator, painter, and writer, who has lived and worked in Rome for the past 18 years. She received her master's degree from Rosary College in Florence, Italy. Dana has wide experience with arts, scholarly, educational and cultural organizations in both the United States and Italy that qualify her uniquely to serve the academy as Heiskell Arts Director. The American Academy in Rome is one of the world's leading centers for independent study and research in the arts and humanities, and is located in a historic setting on the Janiculum, the highest hill in Rome. Congratulations!

Peter Hill Doggett

BIRTHDAY GIFT

Peter Hill Doggett, now living in Southern California, was thrilled to receive for his birthday this summer a copy of the new Cohasset history by Jacqueline Dormitzer. Son of Polly and Tom Doggett, Peter grew up in Cohasset and graduated from Cohasset High before going on to Northeastern and later to Brigham Young University where he received his masters in mechanical engineering.

"I could not have chosen a finer gift for my son," Polly says. He said he started reading the book as soon as it arrived and hopes to finish it before the end of the year. Peter's primary goal, however, is to hike five miles a day until the end of December. That will give him a total of 20,000 miles over the mountainous terrain for that area, not a small accomplishment for any young man.

As we head into the upcoming week and September 11, it is a true time of reflection, sadness and fear for all. It is so important for everyone to reach out and communicate if needed, take the time to think and share how you are feeling and try to keep our children safe and comforted when needed. It is so overwhelming to watch, hear, read and deal with the emotions that are so strong and yet, be able to reassure our kids that they are ok. Our thoughts and prayers go out to all families and friends who are remembering those lost in the horrible tragedy that unfolded one year ago.

That is all for this week. Please send all news, photos and information to me no later than Mondays at noon. EMAIL: aroundtowncohasset@yahoo.com MAIL: 622 CJC Highway

Local couple not big fans of green lawns

Have colorful flowers instead

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Paul Park was tired of mowing his lawn.

Two years ago, grass covered his acre-and-a-half front yard at 294 Jerusalem Road. As if the size wasn't enough, the yard exists on a steep plane that makes maneuvering a lawn mower next to impossible.

"I tried to go up, I tried going sideways, it was just a colossal hassle," said Paul. "The other thing is that the soil out there is so sandy. We'd have to be watering it all the time."

Frustrated, Paul and his wife Karen began exploring the different options for landscaping the area.

"We were concerned about anything that we did to the front lawn," said Karen. "We've got the harbor right down across the street. It's such a steep pitch right down to the water that we were concerned about runoff from our property. We could have done it, but it would have been such a momentous effort. I'm not a particular fan of green lawns anyway. You drive down the road and you see someone's property and where the property line starts it's lush and it's green in the middle of August and I just think that looks really silly. I live in the northeast to appreciate the scenery and you kind of miss the seasons when you have green carpet on your front lawn."

Luckily, nature made a suggestion.

"After we moved in and after we let the lawn grow a bit, there would be these random stalks of corn growing," said Karen. "And I was like, 'You know what, this is really cool, look what happens when you don't use all the fertilizers and the pesticides. So that was kind of inspirational."

That discovery, along with Karen's introduction to the world of ecologically-conscious landscaping, inspired the couple to use ecologically-friendly landscaping in place of a traditional lawn.

> "The types of plant that we used all require less water and fertilizer than a typical landscaping project."
> — Mike Walsh, landscape designer

"I was actually reading the Mariner, and the Garden Club in town had a speaker, Mike Walsh, from Horticultural Concepts, and he's a landscape designer," said Karen. "And he was saying all the things that I was thinking at the time. And there was a book that had interested me at the time, 'Noah's Garden,' by Sara Stein – it's about restoring the ecology of your backyard. The stuff that in the paper, Mike Walsh was quoted with, I don't know, it just hit home. That was what I was looking for, so we contacted him and he designed it and worked with some contractors in the area to get it done."

Walsh designed a landscape of native plants that were hearty, choosing species that would flower more often and require less treatment.

"The types of plant that we used all require less water and fertilizer than a typical landscaping project," said Walsh, in a telephone interview. "There are ornamental grasses, blue mist shrubs, and a lot of Echinacea, which is purple cone flower plants. There are also a lot of Brown-Eyed Susans, along with low-maintenance roses, day lilies, mosses and so forth."

The result is the creation of a beautiful front yard of wild flowers that blends in well with the ledge and natural growth on the edges of the property. The natural look is not deceiving. Within a year of two, the entire project will be self-sustaining.

"Eventually, it will not require even water," said Walsh. "We planned a landscape that wouldn't require water, fertilizer, pesticides or weed control once it is established. This falls within the guidelines of a program I have designed over the past 20 years called Environmentally Sound Landscaping. I believe these principals can be applied to any landscaping project with beautiful results."

The Parks are pleased with their new front yard.

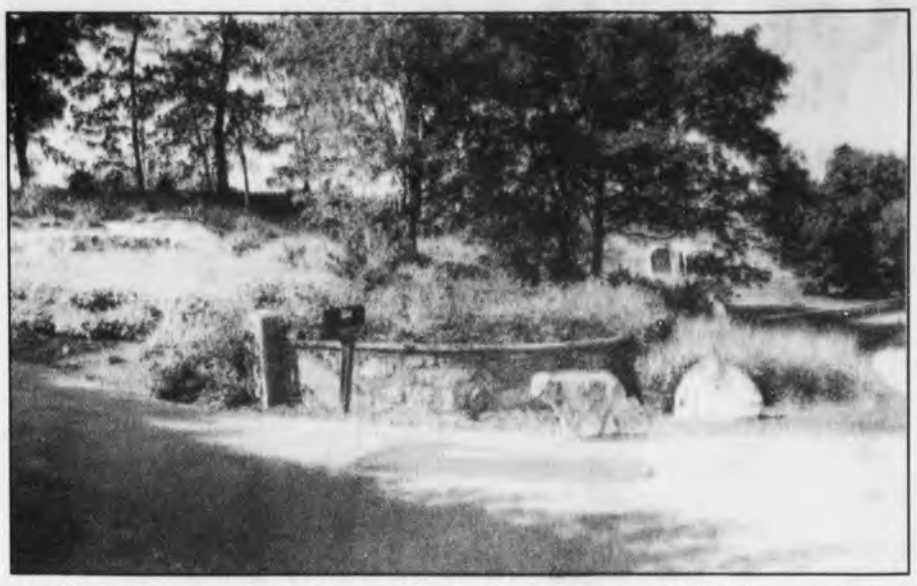
"When I go out there I like to see bees and butterflies and rabbits and squirrels, all sorts of critters," said Karen. "That's probably not a good thing for some people, but we like it. When I see the kids running around and I see a rabbit scurry out, it just seems like that is the way it is supposed to be. It feels right for me anyway."

Despite the project's relative youth, it has not been that much work. Within the next year or two it will be mature and will no longer require regular attention.

"We would water half of the garden with a low-flow system every week, so everything would be watered, every other week and for new plants I don't think that is too bad," said Karen. "As that goes forward, unless there is a drought, we won't need to water it at all, we won't need to fertilize. There's been a lot of weeding in the first couple of years and as you can see that they are forming mounds. As they get closer, the light won't be able to reach the ground and the weeds won't spring up so easily."

Some of the plants didn't work out but the large majority planted are thriving. Almost too much so.

"Those Black-eyed Susans out there really love the sandy soil," said Paul. "They've really just taken over. I get worried that if I stand there too long they might just take me over with them."



A golden retriever meanders by 294 Jerusalem Road, which has a yard full of flowers and plants as opposed to green grass.

A field of brown-eyed Susan and other flowers provide a blanket of color in the Parks' front yard, which is also a critter-friendly place.

The edge of the staircase that leads down the front of the Parks' yard is surrounded by color.

Rethinking MCAS

We'll admit we struggled with the MCAS story this week. At first, it started out as another "attaboy" story for Cohasset, whose 10th graders are ranked eighth out of a possible 266 school districts in assessment model rankings from the Beacon Hill Institute, a public policy think-tank based at Suffolk University.

But then, as often is the case, the story became more complicated as we began our research and the angle had to change.

What the BHI report finds is that MCAS may not be the best barometer for gauging the success of Education Reform, which began in 1993.

Since "ed reform," as it is oft called by school officials, the state has pumped billions of more dollars into school aid. That should be a good thing.

But the BHI report, which uses a range of variables in a complex mathematical formula, finds that more money is not the answer.

It also states that higher teacher salaries and smaller class sizes have not improved school performance, but have actually worsened it.

David Tuerck, an author of the report, explains, for example, that if money is used to keep "dead wood" and not hire younger, more enthusiastic teachers – then it should be no surprise that higher teacher salaries are not correlated to improved student performance.

What the report reveals is socioeconomic factors which are out of the control of local districts are far more important than spending as determinants of performance. The study concludes that improvement on the 2001 MCAS [the results studied] had little to do with increased education spending under ed. reform, but is explained by the socioeconomic character of the school district, pressure from students choosing private over public schools, efforts to discourage students from dropping out, by prior test scores and the fact that seniors who do not pass the test can't graduate.

BHI says school districts in affluent towns should do well on the MCAS because of demographics. But the study notes that some poorer districts are doing better than expected because of their creativity in addressing problems.

The message here is probably towns like Cohasset should not "rest of their laurels."

Now before you start "shooting the messenger" – we are by no means endorsing the report. But we found it interesting and tried to review it with an open mind. You should too. It's available, along with BHI school rankings on www.beaconhill.org.

Mr. Tuerck hopes the report will accomplish two things:

- Provide people with a sense that the state needs to look hard at how it is using education reform money in order to improve learning and school performance
- For teachers and principals across the state to look at schools that have done well and poorly in the report and learn what does and doesn't work in terms of improving school performance.

He notes that if MCAS is more than just passing a test, it should also be about how much is learned.

Certainly, no one can argue with that.

Share your thoughts on 9-11

The events of Sept. 11, 2001 are permanently etched in the minds and hearts of all Americans and people everywhere.

On the upcoming first anniversary of the terrorist attacks, the Cohasset Mariner is inviting voices from the community to express your thoughts about where you were and how you were affected by Sept. 11.

How have you been changed personally by Sept. 11 and how has the community and the country been affected? What about your family and children? Do you approve of how the government has responded to the terrorist threat? What are your personal recollections of where you were on Sept. 11 and what you were feeling?

Signed responses and essays (of a reasonable length) may be sent to the Cohasset Mariner, 73 South St., Hingham, MA 02043. They may also be emailed to mford@cnc.com. Fax to 781-741-2931 Youngsters in elementary school and older are also invited to give their thoughts. Responses will be published in the Sept. 12 issue of the Cohasset Mariner.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

PSO thanks its volunteers

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of the Cohasset Parent School Organization (P. S. O.), I would like to welcome everyone to the 2002-2003 school year.

The P. S. O. has been hard at work through this hot summer, on a number of projects that will help us continue our efforts in communication and curriculum enrichment.

First, Jackie Fitts and Jen Piepenbrink have been hard a work on our P. S. O. Web site: www.cohassetpso.org. They have developed this site so that it is user friendly, contains community links and is full of great information. We hope everyone will access this site and we welcome input.

Secondly, our President's Council Fundraising Committee of Karen Doonan, Karima Davis and Chris Powers have been developing plans for our first "Family Fun Day." This is sure to be a great community wide event for the whole family, and it is slated for March 22, 2003. More information is sure to come!

Finally, Sue Mavilia and Jen Piepenbrink work hard all summer to put together our "famed" school calendar. We are pleased with the number of community activities we were able to post on the calendar this year. We would like to remind all that the back of the calendar has a list of all the new P. S. O. boards at each school and lots of other useful community service information.

The Calendars will be available for distribution within the week.

The P. S. O. will continue its commitment to receive and channel parental questions and concerns on issues confronting our schools and to support curriculum enrichment at all schools. We thank all our volunteers — for without you, we couldn't do what we do! And, we are always looking for more volunteers, so check out what you can do at your school.

What the polls are saying about the race for governor

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

Recap and analysis of the week in state government for the week ending Aug. 30.

Here's one of the dumbest political statements you can make: I don't believe the polls.

That's because the mainstream polls are almost always right. And you know who's got to be happy about it this week? Mitt Romney.

That's because the Boston Globe/WBZ poll had Shannon O'Brien widening her lead on Robert Reich as Reich tried to take the Democratic nomination away from O'Brien, the frontrunner. Voters will decide the nomination Sept. 17. At the same time, though, the Herald poll showed Reich increasingly running the best — much better than O'Brien — against Romney, the Republican. The final election is Nov. 5

The Gallup and Harris polls have correctly called the winner of every presidential race since 1948. The polls showed Cellucci beating Harshbarger in 1998; the tax rollback question of 1990 losing but the one in 2000 winning; and the presidential race of 2000 close beyond belief, perhaps beyond precedent. There are no recent examples of media polls making the wrong call locally.

All these accurate polls were conducted by polling either 400 of the two million Massachusetts voters, or 1,000 of the 100 million U.S. voters. How can this be? Math. It turns out that as long as everyone in the population you're interested in has an equal chance of being contacted, a tiny sample will yield extremely accurate results. If it didn't work, the polls wouldn't be right 95 percent of the time, which they are.

That being said, there are a number of ways in which polls get misused. The most common is to take one poll and predict the race. It would be a mistake to take just this week's polls and say, here's what's happening, because about 5 percent of well-done, scientific polls are wrong, and it's impossible to tell when you're looking at one of the 5 percent. The pros look at trends, not single polls. If you want to call a race, look at whether anyone's moving fast in the final weeks. And by the way: Reich is. Warren Tolman is picking up ground too.

Probably the very best use of polls is to determine what the public wants. If the government is supposed to operate according to the will of the people, it needs an accurate read of what the people want — or don't want. This is how, for example, Beacon Hill was able to divine there wouldn't be a voter revolt if taxes were raised. There wasn't.

That being said, Beacon Hill's reputation is unlikely to improve until it starts observing the dictates of the only poll in which 100 percent of voters participate — the election. The Legislature has shown a predilection lately for vetoing the will of the people by undoing laws passed by the people in referenda. The opinion polls accurately reflect the inevitable result: they continue to show the Legislature's approval rating in the 20's.

The race is increasingly driving the news, but it's far from the only news.

- A much-talked about audit of the state Lottery delivered far-ranging rebukes of the way the agency is being run. The auditor said the Lottery isn't doing enough to go after tax evaders, and that while it's improved its loss control procedures, there's still too many cases where agents aren't paying for the tickets they buy, too many tickets are missing, there are suspicious cases involving agents and lucky winners, and some significant examples of sloppy bookkeeping at the Lottery. The report had been framed in terms of Auditor Joseph DeNucci trying to hurt Treasurer O'Brien, with whom he's long been feuding, as she seeks the Democratic gubernatorial nomination. If DeNucci was politically motivated, his timing was deft: the audit was released far enough before the primary to partly shield the auditor from charges of trying to do in his foe. But it still came out close enough to the big vote to do O'Brien damage before people tune out the news over Labor Day weekend and the final big vacation week of the summer. O'Brien said the Lottery is always looking to improve, but is a much tighter ship than when she got there.
- The story was not as dramatic as last year, when success rates on the must-pass test went way up, but the acting governor and other officials pronounced themselves pleased that 69 percent of the 10th graders who took the test for the first time passed it, compared to 68 percent a year ago. The gap between white students and students of color is still enormous, but closed just a bit this year.
- The high school dropout rate stayed at 3.5 percent in 2002, belying the assertions of MCAS opponents who had predicted the pressure around the test would induce many youngsters to quit school.
- A state survey estimated the number of uninsured in Massachusetts at 397,000, up from 365,000 in 2000. Close observers of the health insurance situation in the Bay State said the preliminary numbers could have been worse — and may be in the near future — given the tepid economy and rapidly rising health costs.
- A report by the Justice Policy Institute found the state has increased spending on higher education by 16 percent from 1985 to 2000, but 273 percent on prisons in the same period. Vincent Schiraldi, president of the Justice Policy Institute said: "It's emblematic of how we build our future. And increasingly, we're building prisons. It sends a terrible message to our young people."
- As public hearings commenced on this year's auto insurance rate hike request, experts from the attorney general's office and the State Rating Bureau said the industry's filing for 7 percent is excessive and unjustified. But the industry said insurance claims are on the rise again, and after rates cuts totaling 25 percent since 1994, a rate increase is warranted. Meanwhile, motorcycle owners criticized the current system, under which bikers are charged the same rates as cars but don't get bonuses like anti-theft and multiple-vehicle credits. A decision is due by mid-December.

Speaker series to be informative, fun

LOCAL VIEW

DONALD IVAS

The Cohasset Social Service League is sponsoring a "Lunchtime Speaker Series" at the South Shore Art Center in the beautiful Dillon Gallery. This speaker series is both informal and informational and is meant as a vehicle to bring people of the community together in a setting that will hopefully promote congenial, social interaction.

The pace of life can be so frenetic that it would be nice to sit in a room surrounded by artwork, and listen to a professional speak on his or her topic of interest. The talks would be brief and entertaining, and people are welcome to bring their lunch or a snack and say hello to old friends or meet some new ones. The volunteers at the Social Service League want to emphasize the word social, and how valuable this commodity is to a small town. We would like to bring people together, and also offer information that may enhance your life, your children, your career or simply rejuvenate your outlook or sense of humor.

We look forward to offering an array of speakers from doctors to artists to fashion designers. A healthy community is a well informed community, an interactive town that shares space and time, and hopefully a common theme or subject that will spur conversation and questions.

This lunchtime series is not meant as another "thing to do" to add to your already hectic lives.

This lunchtime series is not meant as another "thing to do" to add to your already hectic lives. The purpose is to provide an atmosphere in which to share a few minutes with others at your own discretion. If the speaker sounds interesting feel free to come to the gallery and listen, ask a question, bring a friend, learn something new, or just relax and have your sandwich.

I think you will be surprised at how taking a few moments out of your routine will lift your spirits and provide you with a feeling of connection. The generosity of the South Shore Art Center in offering this gallery space as a public service and the kindness of the speakers to appear in this forum for no fee, is quite a gift to the community at large that should be explored and enjoyed.

The speakers will be at the Dillon Gallery in downtown Cohasset every other Friday from noon-1pm. The speakers will leave ample time for questions and discussion and the program is funded through voluntary donations to the SSAC. This informative service is open to everyone, and although we can not please all the people all of the time, or some of the people all of the time, we hope to please some of the people some of the time.

I'm sure on one of these Fridays you will hear of a speaker coming to town that will peak your interest and hopefully you will join in and be a part of the community spirit we are trying to enhance. Look in the Mariner for a brief description of who will be coming on the scheduled Friday. If you have any questions please feel free to call the Cohasset Social Service League at 781-383-0771. Hope to see one of these Fridays.

Donald J. Ivas is administrative director the Cohasset Social Service League.

HEALTH NOTES

Is Cohasset a walkable town?

Make walking part of your day

This is the first in a series of articles talking about how our inactivity became widespread, and what we can do about it. We'll give some of the latest thinking about measuring your activity, how to change the world to be more activity friendly, the politics and economics of changing the inactivity paradigm. The Board of Health believes changing the way we get our exercise is as important as most of the other things we do, and our emphasis on it will continue.

On Aug. 29 at the Lightkeepers House, local health officers from nearby towns received a presentation from Mark Fenton, a dedicated walker, which provided a new outlook on our most pressing health threat after cancer: complications associated with inactivity. The talk began by pointing out that humans, since their hunter gatherer days 16,000 years ago, have been on a slowing treadmill. Whereas, in the early days, humans walked probably an average of nine miles a day, down to today when Americans, on average, walk less than three miles per day. On the other hand, food availability, and therefore consumption, has been increasing. The change from hunter-gatherer to farming increased the availability of food and decreased activity necessary to get it, but things really took off in the last 50 or so years when the internal combustion engine transformed our society both by making food easier to produce, and making people work much less to get it. Lately, in the last 20-30 years, we've made it increasingly easy to drive to places and in many cases, nearly impossible to walk.

The result is inactivity and hence, obesity.

Obesity rates among children have more than doubled in the past 20 years, according to the National Longitudinal Study of Youth. Even worse, rates of obesity are much higher among minority children than among white youth, suggesting a grave social inequity in the availability of safe, healthy recreational opportunities. And obesity; or, rather complications from inactivity kills. .

Physical activity recommendations for children suggest that they need a variety of activities each day-some intense, some less-so, some informal, some structured. Walking or cycling to and from school is an ideal way to get some of that activity at no extra cost to the child or family.

But more important, changes in the design of our environment have driven us to a paradigm of lessened activity. The mall, big store, parking lot, etc.(the popular word for which is urban sprawl) has altered the transportation paradigm. This evolution of our civil structure to ever less walking activity, and ever more dependence on elevators, cars, segway riders, etc.etc. over the last 15 years is threatening the health of as much as 50 percent of the population of the U.S. A threat which is sure to be attacked in much the same way smoking was battled, and over a similar 50-year time period.

And walking, the original exercise of choice for hunter gatherers, when they weren't running from predators, is the cornerstone of exercise for modern humans. Just 30 minutes of activity a day is enough to reduce your risk for cardiovascular disease (the number one killer of both men and women in America), diabetes, osteoporosis, obesity, clinical depression, and some forms of cancer.

Walking works. Walking one mile in 20 minutes will use roughly the same number of calories as:

- Swimming breast stroke for nine minutes.
- Running a mile in 10 minutes.
- Bicycling for 16 minutes.
- Playing baseball for 25 minutes.

To put it simply, with a daily two-mile walk you'll feel better, look better, and be better!

Break it up! Your 30 minutes of activity can be accumulated-say, a 15 minute walk to school in the morning, and 15 minutes home in the afternoon-and still provide the same health benefits, according to the Surgeon General's Report on Physical Activity and Health.

Health Screening Day

The Board of Health is sponsoring a health screening day on Tuesday Sept. 17 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., at the Second Congregational Church (next to Town Hall)

All Cohasset residents are welcome

Free screenings include:

- Vision and Hearing (provided by Lions District 33K Eyemobile)
- Cholesterol and Blood Sugar (provided by the Cohasset Rotary)
- Blood pressure, Osteoporosis, Reiki and Polarity Therapy
- Oral Cancer, Skin Analyzer, Magnet Therapy

Healthy Snacks will be served.

Local AAUW branch starts year with potluck dinner

The Hingham area branch of the American Association of University Women (AAUW) opens its membership year on Tuesday, Sept. 10 at 6:30 p.m. at the Lincoln School Apartments, Central St in Hingham. The theme for the 2002-2003 calendar of activities is Women: Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow.

All are invited to attend this Annual Potluck Dinner. The featured guest at this dinner is Mary Kate McGowan who received an American Fellowship from AAUW. American Fellowships support women doctoral candidates completing dissertations and scholars seeking funds for post-doctoral research leave or for preparing completed research for publication. McGowan's field is philosophy with postdoctoral work at the University of Maryland.

The full schedule of the monthly meetings will be presented during the evening. The Hingham branch meets once a month, September through May and is open to women and men. Members come from the towns between Duxbury and Canton with the majority from Hingham, Weymouth, Braintree and Quincy.

The Hingham Branch of the AAUW is one of more than 1,500 branches nationwide that advocate the ideals of the national organization established in 1881. The goal of the AAUW is to promote education and equity for all women and girls. With a membership of over 150,000, the commitment to these issues is reflected in public policy efforts, programs, and diversity initiatives.

For more than a century, AAUW has influenced legislative debate on critical issues such as education, Social Security, sex discrimination, civil rights, reproductive choice, affirmative action, Title IX, welfare reform, vocational education, pay equity, family and medical leave, and health care reform. Local branches carry out programs such as Diversity Workshops, work with local schools, raise money for the AAUW Educational Foundation and the Legal Advocacy Fund.

Since 1968, the Hingham Area Branch has enjoyed activities dedicated to lifelong learning and the camaraderie of educated women. Opportunities for networking and volunteering exist on a local and state level.

To learn more about the AAUW, its vision and potential value to you while sharing in the members' culinary efforts, please reserve a space by calling co-president Priscilla Johnsen at 781-337-2143.

Snow loved sea stories

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I see where they have located the wreckage of the steamer Portland — New England's most famous shipwreck, 450 feet down at the bottom of Massachusetts Bay.

I can only wish Eddy Snow had been alive to see it.

In case you came in late, Edward Rowe Snow, who lived on the banks of the North River in Marshfield, was the premier chronicler of our love/hate relationship with the sea.

If it happened in New England and Eddy didn't know about it, then maybe it didn't really happen after all.

For a while he wrote a column for the Patriot Ledger in Quincy because his friend, John Herbert, was the editor. When John moved on to the Boston Herald, Eddy moved right along with him.

He had an office on Columnists' Row in the Herald building and occasionally when he was in residence and I had nothing to do, I'd drop in on him and chat about something that happened two or three hundred years ago.

I remember once kidding him about some awkward bit of writing in one of his columns, and he drew himself up to his full height (he was a large man) and informed me, "I'm not a writer; I'm a storyteller!"

Indeed he was. He was a schoolteacher in Winthrop when he decided to chuck it all and do what he really wanted to do: tell stories. He must have written a hundred books. I lost count when it reached 80.

I deduced from our conversations that there were two things that Eddy wanted more than anything else in the world: locate the wreckage of the Portland and find a real sea monster.

When the remains of some unidentified animal washed up on Mann Hill Beach in Scituate, his phone rang off the hook with calls from newspapers and TV stations around the world.

Yes, he told them, it really is a sea monster. It turned out to be the body of a basking shark that had been battered by the surf and nibbled at by fishes. I attribute the error to Eddy's enthusiasm, not ignorance.

He thought he had located the wreckage of the Portland, too.

"On July 1, 1945, Diver Al George, working on a clue I received from Captain Charles L. Carver of Rockland, Maine, located the Portland in 144 feet of water 7-1/2 miles out to sea from Race Point Coast Guard Station," he wrote in "Sea Disasters and Inland Catastrophes."

"He brought up a key from one of the staterooms, plainly marked PORTLAND. His words follow: 'It would seem as though the Portland had hit bottom on her beam ends and then through the years had worked her way into the sand until she is buried almost completely. Only the bare hull of the ship seems in position.

" 'All superstructure evidently has been spread around the ocean bed long ago. The boulders are much higher than my head. I could not tell whether I had found the foremast or the mainmast.

" 'It was a strange experience standing there alone with the ill-fated Portland and probably what remained of the passengers and crew still imprisoned in her sand-covered hull.'"

Was it the wreckage of the same ship that was discovered in 1989 and finally confirmed as that of the Portland only last week?

Now, about that sea monster . . .

South Shore Conservatory, Music Circus are in sync

CONSERVATORY BEAT

DAVID W. BRYAN

Did you know that every time you purchase a ticket to see Tony Bennett or Bruce Hornsby or Pat Benatar at the South Shore Music Circus, you are helping South Shore Conservatory improve the quality of life in our region?

South Shore Playhouse Associates, the governing board of the South Shore Music Circus and Cape Cod Melody Tent, have pledged a quarter of a million dollars to South Shore Conservatory's $3.5 million capital campaign to expand learning space at its Hingham campus. The Playhouse Associates were also a lead supporter in the creation of the Conservatory's Duxbury campus at the Ellison Center for the Arts.

The Music Circus is not only a great place for an evening of entertainment, but also an important community asset that supports non-profit educational, artistic and recreational organizations on the Cape and South Shore.

Bruce Cameron, a director of South Shore Playhouse Associates for more than 25 years and the current President, says that the mission of the Music Circus from the very beginning has been "to return all profits back to the community in support of the arts, education and recreation." In the last 10 years alone, more than $1 million has been awarded to nearly 50 regional non-profit organizations that fall within these guidelines. Cameron says, "South Shore Conservatory is an integral part of the arts in our community. It has been our privilege to support their projects over the last 20 years. When we heard about the Hingham building project, we were excited and thrilled to be in a position to significantly support this effort."

"The South Shore Conservatory is an integral part of the arts in our community. It has been our privilege to support their projects over the last 20 years."

— Bruce Cameron,
South Shore Playhouse Associates

The Music Circus' gift to South Shore Conservatory will name the professional gallery space on the first floor of the new building on the Hingham campus. The Music Circus Gallery will feature bi-monthly exhibits by artists from the South Shore Art Center. Watch for the grand opening in Fall, 2003.

The South Shore Playhouse Associates began as an outgrowth of the South Shore Players.. In the 1930s and '40s the Players put on productions at the Cohasset Town Hall with actors such as Humphrey Bogart and playwrights including Thornton Wilder and Sinclair Lewis. The first operettas and musical shows were produced on the horse grounds of the Bancroft Estate in 1951, when audiences could no longer be accommodated in the Cohasset Town Hall. Theater-in-the-round music tents were new to the performance scene and the 1,000-seat tent erected on Sohier Street was only the fourth in the country. The inaugural tent performance was "Show Boat" with 60 performers. Tickets were priced from $1.20 to $3.60, and most performances were sold out.

As the cost of long-running, large-cast productions increased and audience interest evolved, actors were replaced in the 1970s with singers and dancers "on their way up," such as Anita Bryant and Dick Van Patten, who usually stayed only one or two nights. This concert format has continued through this year's season and now features some of the most popular stars of music and comedy. This year's schedule includes almost 100 performances for more than 200,000 patrons.

Music Circus General Producer Vince Longo expects future seasons to continue to appeal to a wide variety of music and comedy enthusiasts. He plans to increase offerings for children and will add more "Nickelodeon Presents" features, which were very popular this year. He says that artists enjoy performing at the Music Circus because of staff efforts to make the experience a pleasant one. The audience appreciates the intimate venue and the opportunity to feel close to each performer. Our community values the Music Circus for its musical productions and for its generosity to the cultural life of our region.

David W. Bryan is a Trustee and past President of South Shore Conservatory. He currently serves as co-chair of the Capital Campaign. Please call 781-749-7565, ext. 23 for more information on Conservatory programs or ways to become involved in this exciting project.

GARDEN PARTY

Republicans Nathaniel Palmer, who is running for state representative; Congressman Amo Houghton; state Sen. Robert Hedlund; Polly Logan, vice chairman of the state Republican Party; Bruce Herzfelder, a candidate for state treasurer; and former state senator Bill Weeks at a lawn party in Herzfelder's honor at Jeff and Barbara Power's house.

Polly Logan and Rich Silvia share a laugh during the fundraiser for Cohasset's Bruce Herzfelder, who is a Republican candidate for state treasurer. The lawn party was hosted by Jeff and Barbara Power of Beach Street.

CANDIDATES CORNER

Palmer field director

Nathaniel Palmer, Republican candidate for State Representative for the towns of Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, and North Scituate, announces that longtime local activist Chris Barton has joined his campaign team in the capacity of Field Director.

"We are very excited to have Chris Barton join our campaign," Palmer says. "He brings energy, experience, and an infectious winning spirit to the team." Palmer adds, "He is a welcome addition to the growing momentum of the campaign and will undoubtedly play a large towards our victory in November."

Barton is a veteran of several local elections, having served a critical role in campaigns for several South Shore Republican candidates over the last decade. Barton's experience also includes working with statewide gubernatorial candidates and local coordination of presidential races.

"I am very excited to join Nathaniel Palmer's campaign, who has done an unprecedented job as a first-time legislative candidate," Barton explains. "Nathaniel Palmer is a very impressive candidate and will serve as a strong representative in the legislature."

Bob Hedlund earns labor endorsements

With Labor Day approaching, state Senator Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, took time from the busy campaign trail to speak with the United Food and Commercial Workers Union, Local 791, where he saluted the hard working men and women of the South Shore.

"I have always been proud to represent the many hard working men and women of my district," he said. "With my roots in a union family and being the former owner of a small truck repair business, I know hard work and I have always been able to relate to the issues facing the working families. The best interests of working men and women will continue to be a focal point of my efforts as their state Senator."

Hedlund has supported legislation that provided benefits for working-class families including prevailing wage, pension, early retirement, healthcare and job security rights to name a few. The AFL-CIO ratings demonstrate his solid labor record. His combined rating for the 1999-2000 and 2001-2002 legislative sessions on issues important to working families is 84.85 percent, which includes an 88.46 percent rating for the 1999-2000 legislative session.

So far this year, Hedlund has earned key labor endorsements, including the United Food and Commercial Workers Local 791, Carmen's Local 589, International Union of Operating Engineers Local 4, National Association of Government Employees Local 5000, Massachusetts Correction Officers Federated Union, Duxbury Police Union, Cohasset Police Association (IBPO) Local 641, Massachusetts Laborers' District Council, Boston Firefighters, Boston Police Patrolmen's Association, and various other public safety, public employee and trade unions.

Hedlund or his staff can be reached at his district office 781-340-9866, via email RHedlund@senate.state.ma.us or at the State House office 617-722-1646.

LeClair on 40B

Ted LeClair, Democratic candidate for State Senate in the Norfolk/ Plymouth district, is voicing his disappointment on Acting Governor Jane Swift's veto of a bill that sought to point the existing 40B zoning law in the right direction.

"I am disappointed by Swift's veto this past weekend of the 40B amendments," stated LeClair. "While this legislation was far from the needed reforms to the Chapter 40B law, it was clearly a small step in the right direction. The amendment, vetoed by Acting Governor Swift, would have begun to level the playing field between towns and aggressive developers while at the same time recognize that affordable housing already exists in our communities. The Acting Governor's veto of the adjustment to 40B, leaves local officials with a lack of control in the face of unfettered development in their towns."

Chapter 40B allows developers to override local zoning in towns where less than 10 percent of the housing is affordable. In many local communities, local officials are overwhelmed by 40B proposals. Officials, who are working to meet the housing needs in their communities, state that these housing projects will overburden their infrastructure, deplete their water supplies and overwhelm their school systems.

Fall barn sale at fire museum

A fall barn sale will take place at Bare Cove Fire Museum on Saturday, Oct. 26 from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. at 19 Fort Hill St., rain or shine. Donations are gratefully accepted; please call 781-749-0028.

The Bare Cove Fire Museum has a history of supporting the cost of the non-profit museum by holding a bi-annual barn sale in a storage building in Bare Cove Park. Items for sale include skis and poles, books, records (78s and other sizes), tapes, speakers, dishes, furniture, toys, puzzles, clothes, computer games, tools, art, holiday decorations, sports equipment and household appliances. Aside from raising money on the day of the barn sale, museum members will be on hand to answer questions you may have about the history of firefighting in Hingham.

The museum's neighbor, the South Shore Model Railroad Club is having an open house the same day. Everyone is welcome to both venues!

Our Fall Programs can't be beat for affordability & fun!

Sunrise Assisted Living offers residents and families round-the-clock care by dedicated staff in a caring, inviting environment.

All Assisted Living Is Not Created Equal

At Sunrise Assisted Living, our approach to senior care is different—and better. It's an unmatched living environment beautiful beyond compare. It's residents chatting with friends in the parlor with music playing in the background. It's joining a group outing or taking a quiet stroll on the walking paths on our grounds. More importantly, it's a caring place where help is always at hand. Here, residents enjoy supportive health care for the challenges of advanced age—and the promise of new friendships, too. It's a positive alternative to an institutional setting.

Concert rescheduled

The Town of Hull's annual Labor Day band concert and swing dance program, cancelled last Monday due to wind and rain, has been rescheduled for this Sunday, Sept. 8, under tent, adjacent to the MDC Bath House at Hull Shore Drive and Nantasket Avenue.

The event kicks off at 2 p.m. with Four Guys in Tuxes and is sponsored by the Nantasket Beach Merchants Association and the U.S. Filter Co. as a free, community service. The venue is handicap accessible.

Collector's Choice exhibit at art center

The work of artists John Singer Sargent, Pablo Picasso, Paul Klee, Grandma Moses, Marc Chagall, Rembrandt, and August Renoir couldn't be more different. These artists, however, all share one little-known commonality.

They all have had their masterpieces on display at the South Shore Art Center in its traditional Collector's Choice exhibition. The Collector's Choice exhibition affords residents of the South Shore and beyond, an opportunity to view, in their own regional art center, museum-quality works of art from private collections. Artwork procured thus far includes work by Andy Warhol, William Wegman, Abe Morrell, Anders Zorn, Marc Chagall and Salvador Dali. Collector's Choice '02 will feature recent acquisitions and focus primarily on what collectors have collected in the last 10 years. The public will have only three days to view the exhibition before the work is returned to its owners and is no longer accessible to the public.

Collector's Choice is scheduled for Sept. 27-29. A gala opening reception will take place at the South Shore Art Center on Friday, Sept. 27, beginning at 5:30 p.m., followed by a dinner at a private seaside home. The exhibition preview party will be enhanced by the opportunity to purchase collectible frames decorated by popular celebrities. Twenty personalities from the art world as well as the world of sports, politics and literature have agreed to decorate and ersonalize wooden frames that will be offered to the highest bidder in a silent auction.

Tickets for this exhibition fundraiser are $135 ($125 for South Shore Art Center members). On Saturday, Sept. 28, the exhibition will be open to the public from 10a.m. to 4 p.m. On Sunday, Sept. 29, the exhibition will open at 11:30 a.m. with Music Amidst the Masterpieces, an informal brunch and at 1 p.m. a concert by the Boston Chamber Music Society, Ronald Thomas, Artistic Director. Tickets are $35. Reservations for both events can be made by calling 781-383-2787.

Piano lessons resume

Priscilla D. Daniels, professional pianist and teacher of pianoforte, resumes her lesson schedule at her Beach Street home in Cohasset. Her personalized instruction has attracted. students who have had careers in music, while others play just for pleasure.

Mrs. Daniels is a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music of Boston, magna cum laude. She is a member of Alpha Chi Omega, national sorority, and Pi Kappa Lambda, honorary professional society. She has taught in Swampscott, Lincoln, Norwood, and currently in Cohasset.

As part of each lesson she incorporates music theory, harmony, rhythm study and expression. She encourages her students to improvise and compose, and strives to communicate a love and appreciation for the fine arts through the medium of the piano.

Former Archies' teacher opens new chapter at CHS

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

For 27 years, Braintree resident Al Gallotta woke up every morning and headed to Archbishop Williams. As a math teacher, coach, and athletic director, Gallotta was firmly entrenched in the school.

But after his youngest daughter graduated from Williams last year, Gallotta began to seek out a new position that would allow him to spend more time with his wife, away from the long hours required of an Athletic Director. That challenge has come in the form of a position as a math teacher at Cohasset High School

"It felt a little strange starting here today," said Gallotta after his first day of meetings last Tuesday. "Walking into a new building after going in the same direction for 27 years felt a little funny. I taught two classes at Archies, and I usually spent about 90-100 minutes in the classroom because of my responsibilities, whereas at Cohasset it is going to be a lot more than that. I haven't had the teaching schedule I have now going way back."

Middle-senior high school principal Michael Jones was excited to add a teacher of Gallotta's stature to his staff.

"Mr. Gallotta is going to be a tremendous addition to this faculty," said Jones. "He's going to bring his experience here, he's going to bring his teaching skills in mathematics, his background in coaching and being an athletic director."

Beyond that, though, Jones is impressed with the reputation Gallotta earned at Williams.

"He has a reputation all over the South Shore as a man of character, and as an outstanding teacher and mentor," said Jones. "So to have somebody of that kind of experience and that kind of stature, coming into the school is a real plus for us."

"Mr. Gallotta is going to be a tremendous addition to this faculty."
— Principal Michael Jones

Gallotta is ready to begin the next phase of his teaching career and feels that Cohasset is the perfect place to do so.

"I've been looking forward to two things," said Gallotta. "First, I am looking forward to the new challenge a new school system will give me and second, I am looking forward to reducing the number of hours I have to spend at work."

While the new position will require a lot of preparation in the first year, the amount of time pales in comparison to the hours he spent as Athletic Director.

"Some teachers might want to get out of the building at 3 p.m.," said Gallotta, who will teach Geometry after five years of Algebra II at Williams. "If I leave at 4:30 or 5 p.m. it seems like a mini-vacation compared to the hours I was putting in."

Preparation, though, is an area that Gallotta feels confident in.

"I can pride myself on always feeling that whether I prepped for two minutes or two hours, I was always in the classroom ready to teach the subject," said Gallota.

"It feels a little bit funny at this point in time that I am just another person there and my reputation has to be sort of established all over again after establishing it at Archies. You are only as good as what you prove to the people you work with. I'll certainly never attain the status that I had at Archies. That was something I was well-aware of and willing to give up in order to trade for a new opportunity and a new challenge. I have enough confidence to feel that I can go in there and do a decent job."

In the end, though, Gallotta isn't going to worry about building a reputation.

"I love kids, I have always loved kids," said Gallotta. "Whether they are Archies kids or Cohasset kids isn't going to matter. If I am able to deal with them at Cohasset as successfully as I did at Archies, my reputation will follow."

Turning it around

Girls soccer team eyes long sought .500 mark

By Jim Logan
CORRESPONDENT

Anyone who follows Cohasset girls' soccer knows the past few years have been tough ones.

Unable to post a .500 record in any of the five seasons at the helm for the Skippers, nobody understands, or feels, this drought more than head coach Deb Beal.

"It's been hard while [the program] has been growing," she said.

This year, however, Coach Beal feels differently. This year, Coach Beal is more optimistic than at any time during her half-decade tenure at Cohasset High. This year, coach Beal thinks the Skippers just might have what it takes to turn the corner.

"I honestly think that, right now, this program is in the best shape it's ever been," she asserts. "Even though it's early, I think the girls are in the best shape they've ever been in, and [in turn] I believe this is as strong as we've ever looked."

Despite a disappointing 4-10-4 record on paper last fall, Beal stated the numbers don't accurately describe what was going on for Cohasset.

"If you just see the wins and losses, that's one thing," she said. "But what I think was more important was we were in far more close games than we'd ever been in before, and that boosted the kids' confidence. It made them know that we can play [in the South Shore League]."

Among the very veteran lineup for the Skippers in 2002 (21 of 50 players are upperclassmen) are tri-captains Yassie Afshar, Julie Lordan and Molly Flanagan.

Coach Beal thinks the Skippers have the right choices in place as leaders, noting "In my mind, I couldn't really have picked better captains."

Afshar, according to the caoch, gives Cohasset the asset of a pure

What's the buzz?

Cohasset boys eye big things despite heavy graduation toll

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

It has been reported that several South Shore League boys soccer players and coaches who have suffered mightily at the hands of Cohasset in recent years have been talking quite openly about their plans for a little payback this fall.

It's the competitive side of human nature. Who can blame them?

It might also, on the surface, be difficult to question their optimism. First, the Skippers lost to graduation league all-stars Matt Bilodeau and Pete Matiland, along with fellow solid starters Tim Baird, Jay Bertovich, Dan Kinchla and Steve Laney. More recently, it became known that a third Skipper all-star, senior-to-be Greg O'Connell, has transferred to Belmont Hill Prep school. That raised the level of payback talk a decibel or two.

So how do the Cohasset players feel about all this talk of their demise?

"Let people talk all they want," said co-captain Evan Pestone, one of only four seniors on the team. "Teams can feel confident coming in to play us, but that might work for us. We're feeling pretty confident right now too."

So, with all the evidence to the contrary so front and center, where does this confidence come from?

"We have a lot of kids here who have been playing together for a lot of years," noted Robert Hickey, the Skippers other team captain. "We have a lot of juniors who played together with the seniors going back to youth soccer, so we all feel pretty comfortable playing alongside one another.

"We lost some good players, but they were part of a good system. The system is still here."

A sight Cohasset football fans can expect to see a lot more this year: Braun Goodson (#33) lugging the ball.

Can they do it again?

Repeat-minded gridders have work cut out for them

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

After the season the Cohasset High football team had last year, there is just one question on everyone's mind. Can they do it again?

The Skippers surprised all of the South Shore League last year when they bobbed and weaved their way to a 9-1 regular season record to win the SSL crown. Cohasset extended its storybook run into the playoffs, where the dream season was cut short by a juggernaut Tyngsboro team.

Now, one year removed from the success that had the Alumni Field bleachers filled to capacity for every home game, the team looks quite different. Last year's seniors leave behind large holes that need to be filled, but this year's team may be up for the challenge. Obviously the biggest void will be left by tailback Jason Brown.

This phenomenal athlete transitioned from quarterback to running back as a senior to emerge as the top scorer in the South Shore League and one of the best ball carriers in the state. Brown, who will play football for Bowdoin College this coming fall, had the ability to break open the field with great speed, but could also run people over up front.

These are the exact attributes of Brown's lead replacement, senior Braun Goodson. Goodson has performed extremely well as Brown's lead blocker the last two years as the team's fullback. With a good receiving ability out of the backfield and improving quickness (joining the SSL Champion track team this past spring helped, no doubt), Goodson's main talent lies in his power game.

Goodson can be described as more of a Jerome Bettis type runner than a Barry Sanders, meaning he can run people over near the line of scrimmage. However, for this type of game to be successful, he will berelying on a core of inexperienced offensive linemen.

"Braun's a fast kid and a he's bigger than Brown," noted fifth year coach Tony Rolfe. "We might have a better inside game than last year. It all depends on how quickly our offensive line comes together."

Sophomore Ted Straughn will take Goodson's role as the fullback. On the line, only senior Cosimo Cambi and junior Steve Davis come back with a full year playing their position at the varsity level. Senior Ben Lynner will play both sides of the ball, assuming the important role as the center while continuing to play linebacker. Junior Dan Tarpey and sophomore Matt Baroudi appear to have filled the remaining two spots on the line.

Senior Mike Snowdale comes back to the team as the starting quarterback a full year stronger and more confident. An accurate passer with a knack for scrambling, Snowdale was able to spread out opposing defenses with several 100 yard passing games last year. This opened holes up front for the running game to be successful, and Rolfe is hoping for a similar situation this year.

"We are definitely going to throw the ball," affirmed the coach. "If [Snowdale] can improve just a little bit from last year, he is going to be fine."

Snowdale does have the benefit of one of the top receiving

Coach O'Brien returns

Scituate/Cohasset youth football program off and running again

By Dick Cushman
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Dan O'Brien returns to Scituate Youth Football to head up the Sharks Midget program this season, back where he started after serving the last three years as an assistant with the Scituate High School varsity football program.

This is familiar territory for Coach O'Brien. In 1992 he began his football coaching career as an assistant at the youth midget level. Two years later, he started his tenor as the head coach, which earned him two league championships and one Super Bowl title in a five-year period. During those five years, his team's winning percentage was .750.

The year 1999 marked a coaching change for O'Brien. He was named offensive coordinator to the Scituate High School Varsity program. In O'Brien's first year at the offensive helm, the Sailors compiled a 250-point season. In his second year, the offensive playbook exploded. Scituate finished tops in scoring in the Patriot League, and third highest in Division 3 statewide.

O'Brien returns with some familiar faces. Chris Conroy spent many years at his side at the midget level. "Chris' ability to coach young kids is incredible," said O'Brien. "The confidence he puts into the players shows up out on the field. The kids got lucky when Chris decided to return with me."

New to the coaching staff is P.J. Webb, a 2002 graduate of Scituate High School. With varsity football letters under his belt, it will add a plus to this program. O'Brien noted: "I've been coaching this kid for years; he better have it right by now or!"

The Scituate/Cohasset Youth Football program has gone through some changes since Coach O'Brien's departure in 1998. The program has taken the different age levels (Midget, Pee Wees and Mites) of the program and split them into two teams. The Sharks remain as a Division 1 team in the Old Colony Youth Football program. The second team, the Stingrays, became part of the newly formed Division 5 (D5).

The D1 league consists of five teams: Marshfield, Barnstable, Silver Lake, Bridgewater and Scituate/Cohasset. O'Brien has his work cut out for him in this division. In the high school level, four of the five teams play at the Division 1 level, whereas Scituate is in Division 4. Mass. Interscholastic Athletic Association divides its high

"born leader" both on-and-off the field, as well a "talented, defensive center-midi" who solidly handles the 'D' chores for the Skippers at the midfield. "Choosing Yassie to lead our team is a no-brainer," insisted Coach Beal.

Lordan, the "quiet" but nonetheless vital leader for the Skippers, provides the locals with a tough-minded, no-nonsense attitude in the defensive backfield.

"Julie's incredible work-ethic and [drive] is what makes her such a great captain," Coach Beal said. "She leads by example."

Finally, with Flanagan, the Cohasset mentor sums up her fourth-year, senior forward's role for the Skippers in four simple but powerful words.

"She gets it done," said Beal. "That's all you can say when you talk about what she brings to our team. Molly just gets things done out there."

Running down the rest of the Skipper's Opening Day roster, the blue and white are 'kicking' off the 2002 campaign with a number of returning veterans back for another round of action, as well as a new addition to the squad.

Along with Afshar, Lordan and Flanagan, Cohasset's endeavors will be further fortified by the athleticism and experience of Kelly Holway, Brittany Novak, Maura McKenney, Jenn Buckley, Gill Weber, Holly Graham, Brenna O' Donnell and Katherine Coyne, as well as the supremely athletic Lindsay Grossman, a field hockey convert.

"I think if we can play on the same page together, and keep it going that way for the whole season, then I really feel like we'll be able to be successful and compete against anybody," Coach Beal said matter-of-factly. "We might be lacking in a few spots, but top-to-bottom I think we have a very talented and experienced team. And we're going to be tougher to beat than people might have thought of us in the past. I'm very much looking forward to getting the season started."

How much tougher will the Lady Skippers be in 2002? Enough to push the .500 or better 'envelope' and find themselves with a postseason berth?

Those questions begin to be answered later this afternoon, as Cohasset opens up their season with a non-league tilt versus rival to the south Scituate (3:30 p.m. start).

trios in the league. When wide-outs Nick Bolster and Liam Martin both came down with injuries that sidelined them for all of the 2001 season, the Skippers air attack seemed initially to be a lost cause. However, John Durkin and Chris Bilodeau did more than just pick up the slack. They became a force of a tandem that had teams trying to pull double-coverage all year.

Said Rolfe last year of the duo: "I honestly feel I have lost the two best receivers in the league and replaced them with the next best two."

Also heavily involved with the passing game will be senior Tom Anderson, who made quite a few clutch plays as the tight end. In addition to his blocking abilities and talent for helping pick up blitzes, Anderson really helps the team with his special teams play.

Anderson was nearly perfect on extra points through the whole season, something that many high school teams cannot claim. In addition, Anderson added a kickoff and punting dimension to a team that had great success controlling the field position game.

On defense, Cohasset again has holes to cover. Fortunately, it appears the Skippers may be able to cash in on some of last year's great depth, as several underclassmen gained valuable varsity experience last fall.

Cambi will play both ways with Lynner on the defensive line. Both were among the team's top tacklers for two years now. Senior Chris McKenna and junior Tony Truglia are both versatile athletes who can help shut down opposing running backs and junior Sean Connolly emerged as a big defensive end with good tackling instincts last year.

Anderson will take over the responsibilities of the strong safety, the position Brown excelled at last year almost as impressively as he did running back. The secondary will be the hardest area on the field to plug up, since key seniors Brown, David Bouchard and Eric Libby all graduated. McKenna and junior Mike Dooley appear to be candidates for the remaining positions, but Rolfe admitted "We've got plenty of people auditioning for the jobs."

The team still has plenty of time to prepare for game one, although it is a tough opener: Sept. 16 down in Nantucket. Making the trip down there is never easy, and will be especially difficult as the first game of the season.

"We are ahead of where we were at this time last year," concluded the coach. "Things are going well."

"Members of our Seadogs program benefit from skill development, quality coaching, and tournament experience, national competition," SSBC president/director Frank Niles, Jr. said. "They also have the opportunity to experience a unique vacation with family members, meet new friends, and have lasting memories."

The Seadogs program is part of the South Shore Baseball Club, which been a member ofthe Massachusetts Association of the Amateur Athletic Union since 1994. The Seadogs compete against other Massachusetts AAU teams for the right to qualify for the AAU National Baseball Championships held all across the country. The Seadogs program is intended to supplement, rather than replace, local Little League, Babe Ruth, or American Legion baseball programs.

The South Shore Baseball Club is a year round, full service club and training facility for baseball and softball players (boys and girls), ages five and older, in Hingham. For more information about SSBC or the Seadogs call 1-888-749-6466/(781) 749-6466 or visit its Web site at www.ssbc.com.

What's the buzz?

The system was put in place by Dave Nigro when he took over as head coach two years ago. He has preached ball control and passing over the more traditional dump and run approach employed by most coaches, and that mindset has taken root. The results speak for themselves: a trip to the Eastern Mass. semifinals in 2000 and a 13-2-3 record last year followed by advancement to the quarterfinals.

"I think what we do kind of throws some teams off," continued Hickey. "And the players who are here now have been playing this way for three years. We've gotten more and more comfortable with it."

Nigro, who coaches club soccer year-round, is hardly a one-trick pony, however. In fact, he is widely considered one of the more innovative and adaptive coaches on the South Shore.

"He's definitely one of the best coaches I've ever been around," said Hickey. "He has a way of picking out what you're doing wrong, and explaining it to you so it's easier to correct it."

Though much of this Skipper confidence may have been pre-existing, some of it has no doubt sprung from their success in the pre-season.

Last week, the Div. 3 Cohasset squad knocked off Div. 1 Quincy, 4-2. This weekend, at the Hingham jamboree, they took it to another Div. 1 team, Arlington, 3-0, as well as Div. 2 Milton, 2-0. The Skippers lost only to host Hingham (1-0), a perennial contender coming off a few wins in last year's state Div. 2 tourney, but Pestone feels his team actually outplayed the purported powerhouse Harbormen.

"We had six or seven good opportunities to score, but couldn't finish for one reason or another," said the co-captain who scored twice in the win over Arlington. "If we played them again like that, I think we'd win."

Offense will likely be the principal trademark of this year's Skippers squad, with Pestone, Hickey and multi-talented junior Chris Clark, a third returning starter, all playing up front.

"I think we're going to score plenty," said Hickey. "We have a lot of speed up front, some pretty good talent and lots of experience."

The ball control offense will only be as good as the midfield, and this is where the slick ball-handling Clark is being looked to for big things, as are junior John Andrade and speedy senior winger Curt Kahn.

The picture at the defensive end appeared a little more fuzzy at the time of this writing, though this was primarily the result of stiff competition, according to the two captains.

Juniors Craig Laugelle, John Oronte and Conor Buick were just three of the players on the backline Hickey and Pestone identified as having distinguished themselves.

The final line of defense, likewise, would seem to be in good hands. Junior Jesse Brewer solidified the Skippers in net upon taking over midway through last season, and has come back much improved this fall, in Hickey's estimation.

"Jesse's always been a good goalie, but it looks like he's got his confidence going now," offered the co-captain. "He's been really strong in the scrimmages, and I think he's going to have a big year for us."

The Skippers will get a good sense of just where they stand when they open the season on Tuesday night at Norwell, the team most close observers feel is the clear class of the South Shore League.

"I honestly feel the South Shore League championship is going to come down to us and Norwell," concluded Pestone. "We finally beat them once last year, and we'd like to make it twice this year. That's one of the goals we've talked about."

school teams according to student enrolment numbers. Scituate is joined by Cohasset to form one team. This two-town partnership creates a larger youth program, which in turn puts these teams in the D1 league.

The Stingray team plays at the Division 5 level. This division is made up of four teams. The towns are Barnstable, Hingham and Middleboro/Plymouth. This division was formed to create more playing time for the larger youth programs.

The Scituate/Cohasset Youth program has grown to a total of 205 youths playing football. The D1 and D5 programs are grade appropriate. The youth football program consists of grades three to eight. The Stingrays are made up of third-grade players in the Mites program. The fifth-grade team is the PeeWees and seventh-grade makes up the Midgets. All of these teams are made up of first-year players. The D1 teams are made up of second-year players of each youth level (Mites, Pee Wees and Midgets).

Youth Football notes

Scituate/Cohasset Youth Football President Joe Obert would like to thank local vendors for their support in putting together a new equipment building.

"After a few months of working with the high school and school committee, the business community stepped up to bat. This facility makes the program flow so much easier. Having this facility at the field makes access much easier for the coaches and parents, which in turn makes good operational sense, added Obert.

Local vendors who helped support the construction of the new equipment facility were Scituate Concrete Pipe, Joe Bonomi Const., Ed Duffy Concrete, M.J. Hallin, Callis Electric and Suffolk Const. Tricor's Jim Beaty gets a special thanks from the youth football board of directors for a job well done.

SPORTS NOTES

Cohasset Soccer Club Registration

The 2002/2003 Soccer Season is about to begin. Registration for grades K-4 will be held this Saturday, September 7, at Milliken/Bancroft Field from 9 am to 12 pm. All players must register to play. Forms can also be picked up and left at the Cohasset Recreation Dept office during working hours this week. The soccer season for grades K-4 will begin Saturday, September 21,2002.

This weekend begins the fall season for the Under 12 boys and girls. Boys are scheduled on Saturday, September 7, from 9am-12pm, and the girls are scheduled from 2-5 pm on Sunday September 8.

All new coaches are required to attend a 4-hour coaching clinic this Saturday September 7, at Milliken/Bancroft Field from 8 am-12 pm.

Middle School Sports notes

Meetings and physicals

There will be a pre-season meeting for all Middle School athletic teams – football, field hockey and boys and girls soccer — on Monday, Sept. 9, with all practices scheduled to get underway on Tuesday, Sept 10. Locatiosn and times will be announced in school.

Any questions should be directed to Middle School Athletic Director Torin Sweeney or High School Athletic Director Ron Ford at 781-383-6103.

Soccer coaches sought

The Middle School Athletic Dept. continues to look for coaches for both the boys and girls soccer teams.

Any one who is interested in either of these positions should call Middle School Athletic Director Torin Sweeney or High School Athletic Director Ron Ford at 781-383-6103.

Indoor Lacrosse back In Hingham

South Shore Sports Center (in Hingham) will be hosting a Fall/Winter indoor lacrosse program for all youth levels (Grades 3 – 8). Program includes staff coaches, league certified referees, skills development and regulation games, competitive playing conditions, and convenient hours (doesn't conflict with other sports ! !). This a great way to sharpen your skills or get an introduction to the game while having fun playing on a full-sized astro-turf field. Registration deadline for the first session is September 3rd and play begins on Friday September 13th. Individual and team applications are available at the SS Sports Center (or by email) by calling 781-740-1105.

Starland opens to local HS athletes

As local high school sports programs begin to gear up for the coming year, the new owners of Starland Sports & Fun Park want to get involved.

Starland owners have sent letters to the high school principals and athletic directors of Hanover, Silver Lake, Marshfield, Scituate, Norwell, Cohasset and Hingham, offering each a variety of community contributions.

Free access to driving range and batting cages

Starland's driving range and batting cages will soon become available to area high school varsity and junior varsity golf and baseball programs for periodic free use. "We view the facilities here at Starland as valuable community resources. We want to make them available to young athletes free o charge," said Starland principal Peter Morin. "We are already scheduling several local golf teams for their fall practice times."

Activity fees for local high school students

Starland also plans to work out programs for payment of local student access fees for its employees. "Keeping reliable employees is very important to a successful operation," General Manager David Sale observed. "We believe that a young man or lady who is involved in school activities and is eager to work part-time and summers for Starland is someone we want to reward. Paying his or her activity fees is just one way of doing that."

Financial contributions, fund-raising for boosters

Starland has also committed to purchasing advertisements in local varsity football and hockey programs; and will make the Starland facility available to boosters clubs for their fund-raising efforts. "Starland is a natural venue for boosters clubs to hold fund-raising activities and events, and we think we can help them raise significant funds for their programs," said Morin. Starland's weekend ride packages will be made available to area boosters at significant discounts, enabling boosters to sell the packages for face value and bank the difference. "Imagine, area kids can make significant contributions to their sports programs and ride go-carts at the same time," said Sale.

The Starland facilities will be made available weekend days throughout the fall. Area boosters club directors should contact Sale or Morin directly at Starland by calling 781-826-3083.

New regional lax program for jr. high boys at Hanover Y

A first-of-its-kind regional lacrosse program for middle-school and junior high boys will be launched this September by Cohasset High varsity boys' coach Kevin Orcutt.

The program, to be held Sundays at the Hanover YMCA complex at Mill Pond, will be open to any South Shore player interested in improving both his individual and team skills, said Orcutt.

"Eventually, we plan to develop this as a group that will enter age-appropriate tournaments during the off-seasons and in summer," said Orcutt, who coached Cohasset to the state finals in 2001 and the quarterfinals last spring, and led a pair of Bay State Games gold-medal winning teams in 2001 and 2002.

The program – which will be called Hawks Lacrosse – begins on Sunday, September 15. It will run as a 10-week session this fall.

The program will go from 9 am until 11 am each Sunday. The total program cost will be $90 per player. Players will be expected to bring their own equipment, including stick, helmet, gloves and shoulder pads.

Players and their parents who would like to pre-register for the program can do so by calling Coach Orcutt at either 781-837-7764 or 617-827-4160, or by e-mail at kocoach4@aol.com. Registration forms will be available at the Hanover Mill Pond YMCA on Sunday, September 15 at 9 a.m.

New team in town really 'Rox'

EXTRA POINTS

MIKE SPELLMAN

Took in my first Brockton Rox game over the weekend.

The four $6 tickets were complimentary, so I took my three sons. I hadn't heard a lot about the first-year Northern League independent franchise, so I went in with virtually no expectations. I'm glad this was the case, because it turned out to be one pleasant surprise after another.

In brief, let me just say the MLB franchise 25-miles to the north could take quite a few lessons from the folks who inhabit the brand-spanking new 4,750-seat Campanelli Stadium right next door to Brockton High. In fact, the BHS lot is the principal parking area for the games. The cost, $3 per vehicle, is five to seven times less expensive than anything around Fenway Park. And that's just the tip of the "preferable compare shopping" iceberg.

Granted, Fenway is a much more friendly place now than it was in the days of my youth, the one many area historians today refer to as the "Curmudgeon Era." Oh yes, the good old days, when a 10-year-old boy would be yelled at by the nearest of the finely trained crusty red-clad ushers for standing up any time before or after the seventh inning stretch (sniff), even if he was just trying to temporarily relieve the ache from those mini-torture devices they liked to call "deluxe bleacher seating."

It is not surprising that everyone associated with the Rox franchise – the parking lot attendants, ticket takers, ushers, concessionaires, et al — seems genuinely appreciative, even thrilled, just to see you supporting their product. Of course, this is pretty much what you'd expect from folks who've hitched their wagon to a fledgling enterprise, but there's no reason for that to detract from the warm, almost alien feeling it provides.

It's nice to not be taken for granted. Even at "Friendly Fenway," can't say there have been many times I haven't felt that way.

Now many would say there's no way you can compare Major League Baseball, Inc. to a little independent venture like the Brockton Rox. My response to that: "WHY NOT?!?

OK, I'll concede the assertions about greater skill level and all of that. However, I'm hoping there are a few points you, my fellow moderate-to-lower income consumers with sports loving kids, will concede to me.

Hmmm....where to start?

Campanelli Stadium itself cuts a nice swathe against the Brockton Fairgrounds and "cement palace" BHS backdrop. It is not only an attractive picker upper for the whole area, but it's, get this, clean. Not only that, but the seats are comfortable. Imagine that.

The boys and I arrived 20 minutes before the opening pitch, and players were still out there signing autographs up and down the right and left field lines. My boys stood in line to get their complimentary "Brockton Rox" ball signed by a couple of players none of you have ever heard of. My kids didn't care. They still thought it was "really cool."

We've been to a bunch of Red Sox games, even a few exhibitions down in Fort Myers, and the closest they ever got to actual contact with a Major League ballplayer was a foul ball that zipped by us menacingly and caromed off a seat four or five rows back.

Needless to say, the kids were extremely jealous of the area Little Leaguers who got to escort each Rox starter out on to the field during opening introductions.

The real fun, though, started after the first pitch.

The P.A. guy was extremely interactive with the fans. There were one or two of the old "sign that fan to a contract" following a clean catch in the stands. But the guy, whoever he was, had a few original lines and sound effects too. The kids thought he was hysterical.

There were also a couple of "paid hecklers" sitting near us. Of course, we just thought they were "funny teenagers" until late in the game when they got up to do their dance on top of the visiting team's dugout. Prior to that, they almost had my kids passing nachos through their noses a few times with a few of the verbal jabs tossed at opposing players.

More silliness prevailed between just about every inning. Sumo wrestling between two patrons in those big ultra-cumbersome padded suits, kid races around the bases, giant bowling and more routines atop dugouts were just some of the additional attractions.

Yeah, a lot of it was kind of childish. But, come to think of it, isn't baseball kind of childish too? Amazing how easily we seem to forget that around here, isn't it?

The Rox lost the game, 5-0. The kids were disappointed, but not near so much as they are when we leave Fenway following a home town setback.

It was a three- to four-minute walk back to the car, and we were in smooth-running traffic on Route 123 less than 10 minutes after that.

The final testament: all three of them asked how soon we could do it again. Quite honestly, I can't remember hearing this question following any of our recent sojourns to see the Celtics, Bruins or Red Sox. Of course, being now mature enough to realize the associative costs and what an ordeal it is getting in and out of these venues, they no doubt know what the answer would be to this question.

Still, not bad. If kids can figure this much out on their own, it shouldn't be all that hard for the rest of us.

My recommendation: give the Rox a chance next year.

IT'S HAPPENING

Buttonwood hosts children's author

Marie-Louise Gay will visit Buttonwood Books in Cohasset on Wed. Sept. 25 from 3- 4:30 p.m.. Gay has won innumerable awards for her children's books and is the author/illustrator of the best-selling Stella series ("Stella, Fairy of the Forest", "Stella, Queen of the Snow" and "Stella, Star of the Sea"). Gay has the wonderful ability to create "attitude" with a few strokes of her pen and is equally clever with words. She is a frequent visitor to schools in Canada and enjoys working with children. Her presentation will include an interactive drawing activity which Buttonwood's young friends won't want to miss! Please call 781-383-2665 for additional information or to order your signed copy if unable to attend. Free

Writers group meets

The Buttonwood Writers Group will resume meeting at 7:30 p.m. on Monday, Sept. 9. The mission of the group is to motivate, encourage and support both new and experienced writers. Buttonwood Writers Group meets the second and fourth Mondays of each month at Buttonwood Books and Toys in Shaw's Plaza on Route 3A in Cohasset . For additional information call 781-383-2665

Yard sale items

The South Shore Community Center will hold its first annual Yard Sale on Sept. 14 from 9 a.m.-2 p.m. at the SSCC located at 3 Main St. The SSCC is seeking donations (no clothing), which are tax deductible, for the Yard Sale with all proceeds going to support the Center. Donors can drop off items at the SSCC from Sept. 9-13 from 9 a.m.-noon each day. For questions, please contact the SSCC at 781-383-0088.

Toys, kids' clothes for benefit yard sale

Our World, the children's global discovery museum, needs your gently used children's clothes and toys along with children's books, videos, baby equipment and furniture for a Sept. 21 yard sale.

The museum is set to open in Cohasset in the fall of 2003 in a two-story wing of the former Joseph Osgood School. The $1 million project will include an associated global-themed playground.

The yard sale will take place from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. on Saturday, Sept. 21, in the Cohasset Town Hall auditorium.

Children's items can be dropped off at the auditorium from 9:30 a.m.-6:30 p.m. on Thursday, Sept. 19, and from 9:30 a.m.-2:30 p.m. on Friday, Sept. 20. Donations will be welcome from all nearby towns.

Yard sale chairman Kelly Ziff needs at least 20 volunteers to help receive, sort, price, display and sell the goods. Contact her at 781-383-0225.

Children's chorus at conservatory

South Shore Conservatory announces the introduction of Bel Canto Voices, a very special children's chorus, under the direction of vocalist Gwynne Cushing Sousa.

Sousa, who taught choral music in the Duxbury Public Schools for the past six years, describes the program as a supportive, fun, positive learning experience that provides vocal training to singers, ages 8–13, using a variety of rehearsal techniques and approaches to help young vocalists develop pitch matching and inner-ear hearing.

Participants experience singing harmony, learn vocal warm-ups, use Kodaly solfege hand signs, and learn to respond to conducting gestures. The program is especially beneficial for students preparing to take private voice lessons, and for those in the early stages of private voice lessons.

Sousa joined the faculty at the Conservatory this past summer, co-directing a very successful first season of Summer Vocal Institute, a week-long total immersion workshop for young classical singers. She brings with her not only years of teaching experience, but a genuine passion for teaching voice.

"I help students discover their own instruments," says Sousa. "My students don't all sound alike. They each have their own individual sound." She also says that she is passionate about her students becoming musicians and learning to read music. "I want them to gain musical knowledge at the same time they get their vocal knowledge."

The first 15-week semester of Bel Canto Voices starts on Thursday, Sept. 19 at the Hingham campus, and Saturday, Sept. 21 at the Duxbury campus.

Sousa also teaches private lessons at South Shore Conservatory. Singers interested in becoming part of this new chorus, or those interested in studying privately with Sousa, can call 781-934-2731, ext. 11 for the Duxbury campus, or 781-749-7565, ext. 10 for the Hingham campus.

Roaring 20s party benefits museum

A Roaring 20s Garden Party and Antique Car Parade will be held Sept. 22 from 3 to 7 p.m. Lions Gate, the Cohasset estate of Diane and Robert Johnston.

The event will benefit Our World, the children's global discovery museum that will soon be under construction in a two-story wing of the former Joseph Osgood School. The hands-on museum and a related global-themed playpark are set to open in the fall of 2003.

Lions Gate, the site of the garden party, is a four-story American Gothic mansion built in 1904 for shoe magnate Thomas Gustave Plant and his wife, Carolyn.

Plant later built "Castle in the Clouds," a sister house to Lions Gate, in New Hampshire. A frequent guest there was Teddy Roosevelt.

Carolyn Plant remained at the Cohasset house, which she surrounded with beautiful gardens. Those gardens have been restored, along with the house itself.

Period dress (1900-1920s) is encouraged for this event, but optional. After a parade through town, the antique cars will be parked around the estate's circular drive. Violin soloist Eugene Kaplan will entertain and works by well-known portrait artist Peter Quidley will be on exhibit. Refreshments will be served.

The cost for the benefit is $150 per ticket, much of which is tax deductible. For further information, call 781-383-3198. Reservations by check or credit card can be sent to Our World, P.O. Box 422, Cohasset, 02025.

Folk duo at coffeehouse

On Saturday, Sept. 14 at 8 p.m., the Old Ship Church's Coffeehouse off the Square presents the folk-pop duo, The Kennedys.

Pete and Maura Kennedy have been together 10 years, always working on their own songs and performances. Their collaboration won them the "Best Adult Contemporary Album" award for 1995's memorable "River of the Fallen Stars" and they were a big hit at the 2000 Boston Folk Festival.

The evening starts with a brief open microphone offering all singers, dancers, mimes, poets, jugglers, etc., a chance to be seen and heard by our attentive audience.

The coffeehouse is at the Old Ship Church's fully accessible Parish Hall, 107 Main St., Hingham Square, just a few doors up from Loring Hall Theatre. Admission is $10 and coffee, tea, cider and desserts are available at 50 cents. Net proceeds benefit programs of the Unitarian-Universalist Service Committee.

For information, call either Jim Watson at 781-749-1767 or John Leonard at 781-749-2852.

Clay days at the art center

Tuesday is clay day at the South Shore Art Center. Two classes for clay students, beginners and beyond, will be offered on 10 Tuesdays beginning Sept. 17. The classes will be led by experienced artists and instructors. Sandra Donnellan will teach in the morning and Janet Nugent will teach the evening section. The morning class will meet 10 a.m.-1 p.m. and will introduce the beginning clay student to the techniques of coil, pinch, slab, wheel and combinations of these techniques. Pieces created will be glazed and fired.

The Tuesday evening class, to run from 6:30-9:30 p.m., will include ongoing demonstrations and assistance with the potter's wheel as well as slab, pinch, and coil techniques. The evening class is for all levels and all work will be glazed and fired. Tuition for each class is $255 ($235 for SSAC members). Students can spend their autumn Tuesdays with their hands covered in clay and be ready to greet the winter months with a new skill and some lasting handcrafted artwork. For more information visit www.ssac.org or to register call 781-383-2787.

On Saturday, Sept. 28, there will be a unique opportunity to tour seven private homes tucked away in special locations in the neighborhoods of Hull to benefit Wellspring, a community-based human service organization serving Hull and surrounding towns.

Each of these 'Hills of Hull' homes is perched high on one of the town's many hills and captures a commanding view of the open ocean, harbor and even the Boston skyline. These lovely vistas also include Worlds End, and many of the islands of Boston Harbor, depending on which property is being visited.

Called "The Hills of Hull," the tour will be held between10 a.m. and 4 p.m. Advance tickets may be purchased for $20 prior to Aug. 28 at the following locations: Bookport, Hingham; Cards & Shards, Cohasset; and Mermaids in Hull. Tickets may also be purchased by sending a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Wellspring, 814 Nantasket Ave., Hull 02045 with an enclosed check.

The day of the tour tickets may be purchased for $25 at the Hull Town Hall. Further information about the tour is available by calling the staff at Wellspring at 781-925-3211.

Wellspring serves many towns throughout the South Shore. It is financed by income from its thrift shop, community donations and private grants.

Appraisal day at Hull museum

Do you have a family heirloom passed down through the generations? Maybe a great flea market find that might be a real treasure? Would you like to know what it is worth? Bring those special items you have been wondering about to the Skinner Antiques Appraisal Day at the Hull Lifesaving Museum, 1117 Nantasket Ave., on Saturday Sept. 14 from 10 a.m.-3 p.m.. For more information, contact Victoria Stevens at (781) 925-5433.

Stuart Whitehurst, director of Books and Manuscripts, English and Continental Furniture and Decorative Arts specialist and senior appraiser with Jim Callahan, director of Asian Art and general appraiser, will provide verbal appraisals on a first-come first-serve basis. Doors open at 9:30. Appraisals will begin at 10 o'clock. The cost will be a single appraisal for $10 museum members/$15 non-members or three items for $25 members/$30 non-members. All proceeds benefit the Hull Lifesaving Museum educational programs. Please limit your objects to three items. Good quality photographs may be substituted for large or fragile objects (Please exclude coins and stamps).

Skinner Auctioneers and Appraisers of Boston and Bolton have been conducting Appraisal Days for more than 25 years and appear frequently on the popular PBS series "Chubb's Antiques Roadshow". Parking is free at the museum. Light refreshments will be available for purchase. The event is sponsored by Gray, Gray, & Gray, LLP Certified Public Accountants.

Representatives from Skinner Antiques will appraise your treasures Sept. 14 at the Hull Lifesaving Museum.

Leadership!

If that word caught your eye, our Emerging Leaders Program may be for you. You can strengthen your leadership skills, network with distinguished mentors from the private and public sectors, and learn how to work effectively with other leaders toward significant civic goals.

Each year we choose a diverse group of program fellows with demonstrated potential for leadership, and five to ten years of professional experience, to take part in a week-long seminar, monthly meetings, and coached team projects addressing Boston-area issues. Fellows must be nominated by senior leaders in their organizations or communities.

Nominations for the 2003 program are due October 9.

Kitchens on menu for Old Ship cook's tour

By Constance Gorfinkle
SPECIAL TO THE HINGHAM JOURNAL

From the day a cave man discovered fire, people have been gathering around that source of heat for comfort, for community and for cuisine, not necessarily in that order. Today fire is harnessed in different ways, but in none so satisfying as the kitchen range, which might be electric or gas, convection or still, or even microwave, if time is more important than how your food is prepared.

For most people buying a new home, the kitchen is the room that can make or break a sale. If it's airy and modern and conjures up visions of family parties with everyone dipping a spoon into the chowder bubbling on the back burner, then the house won't be on the market for long, never mind that the rest of the house needs re-painting, re-roofing and re-flooring.

The kitchen is the heart of the home and if it's beating strongly, then eventually every other room in the house will be healthy

But life styles do change. In Colonial days, houses had huge, walk-in hearths, wherein a pot perpetually simmered, and all life was centered around that fragrant warmth. Later, for those who could afford servants, the kitchen was relegated to the back of the house (and to the cellar in some townhouses), where cooks labored unseen on dishes that would be presented with the fanfare of stage productions and no one, save the cooks, would have to be exposed to the rough and tumble of meal preparation.

Now, the dining tables have been turned once again. Today, guests often are served in the kitchen where meal preparation is the evening's entertainment. Certainly the first room in the house any first-time visitor wants to see is the kitchen. With that in mind, the Old Ship Church in Hingham, for its fall fund raiser, is presenting a cook's tour on Saturday, Sept. 14 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Included will be seven private homes and one restaurant.

The kitchens have been chosen for the ways they reflect the needs and tastes (no pun intended) of their owners and for the variety of ways people have met the challenges presented by their families' particular situations.

In the case of Erika and Sam Buell, it was four years before they realized their dream kitchen. Not as grand as many kitchens are in today's new homes, the Buell's kitchen could not be expanded beyond the original dimensions the room had in 1929, when the brown cape near Hingham Town Hall was built. But if the Buells, both of whom are lawyers, were constrained by size, they weren't be imagination. Determined to be organized down to her last fork within the limited space, Erika Buell met with the folks at Faneuil Kitchen Cabinets in downtown Hingham to plan every need she had as a now, stay-at-home mom who every once in a while enjoys throwing a good party. That included a drawer with slots the exact dimensions of her spice jars, as well as sleek, custom, all-wood cabinets accented with handsome stainless steel hardware.

To create this cheerful room that's dominated by a large cherry island where family and friends can enjoy a good meal, the Buells first had to get rid of a huge storage closet that not only wasn't efficient but robbed the room of precious square feet. Also on the hit list were a pantry cabinet that was too deep for easy access and an extra door that had no real function since there was another door just up the wall a few feet.

With the help of Norwell general contractor, Sean Ford and a lot of browsing of the Internet, the Buells have a bright, commodious kitchen with a new, shiny oak floor, black and brown-speckled granite counters, off-while tile backsplashes, German-made Bosch five-burner gas stove and convection/still oven, Bosch dishwasher hidden by a door to match the cabinets, GE microwave, a new pantry cabinet, and an elegant pair of pendant lamps with frosted shades that should cast a romantic glow over the Buells' next party.

It was at her last New Year's Eve party that Erika made up her mind the kitchen was going to have to be remodeled.

"Seeing how that big storage closet made everything seem so cramped convinced me," she said during a recent interview at her home. But if Erika, out of necessity, is the one who most often works in the kitchen, both Buells' ideas contributed to the finished product. Sam was particularly interested in the kinds of appliances they would get. That included the refrigerator, which is at counter-depth, rather than jutting out beyond the counters, as most do. That loss of space is made up for with added height. But that's no problem for Sam, who is six-foot-three, his wife points out.

Interestingly, Erika, whose organized, lawyerly mind is evident in the careful planning of this attractive, efficient kitchen, which includes under-the-counter lighting and ceiling speakers so she can hear her favorite music while she cooks, hesitated most over the wallpaper on one wall. With paint on all the other walls throughout the house—which is the general trend these days—wallpaper seemed a rather bold move, she concedes. Erika finally settled on a Waverly paper, whose soft calligraphic design in beiges and browns not only captures your eye as soon as you enter and gives the room special character, it has determined the warm yet sophisticated palette throughout the kitchen.

Because the Buells didn't have unlimited space, they were forced perhaps to be more creative than others with more square feet to fill. The result is a gem of a working area and, more importantly, a wonderful place to gather with family and friends to enjoy the best of times.

If the Buells had their own problems to overcome, Patty Kane had very different challenges to meet, mostly because instead of having to prepare only a few meals at a time, she might have to serve six dozen meals at one sitting. That's because she is the founder and owner of The Square Café, as much a long-held dream as was the Buells'.

Patty Kane, a young and attractive entrepreneur who began her days in the restaurant business as a salad girl and grew up to own and run a chain of middle- and up-scale restaurants on the South Shore with her former husband, Ed Kane, had looked a long time for "the right location." Thus, Kane says, she was thrilled to learn of caterer Arthur Roebuck's decision to close his landmark restaurant, The British Relief, a decision that made it possible for her to at last put in action the desire to create a moderately upscale restaurant that would not only provide food to nourish the body but have an ambience that would "feed the soul," said Kane during an interview at The Square Café.

"I wanted a modern, earthy, New England interior that would be comfortable and timeless," an effect she believes has been achieved by designer Peter Niemitz, who also created the looks for Tosca and Fireking restaurants in Hingham.

Indeed, a welcoming atmosphere prevails throughout the long, rectangular dining room, with its soft earth tones and rich dark woods.

But if "the front of the house," as the dining area of a restaurant is called, invites one to relax and take it easy, the kitchen at The Square Café is all business under the watchful eye of Chef Kimberly Rego-Nason, who rules supreme in a shiny, stainless-steel world constructed by Paramount, a company based in Providence that designs commercial kitchens.

Half of the size of the 2,500-square-foot facility, The Square Café's kitchen is equipped, efficient and organized enough to turn out 75 meals a seating. With several ovens performing different functions, a half-dozen sinks, including one used only for the preparation of vegetables, 10 gas burners and a dough mixer, Rego-Nason and her staff of 10 create a cuisine she describes as French classical with Asian influences.

A graduate of the Culinary Institute of America, Rego-Nason got her early experience with Master Chef, Jasper White, "rotating through all stations," and went on to be sous chef in such restaurants as 8 Holyoke and the Blue Room, both in Cambridge.

Having been a chef for 15 years, she is very much on the same wave length as Kane in that she too believes a restaurant should be a holistic experience, that is, it should satisfy needs beyond hunger. Kane extends that philosophy to her employees by keeping the restaurant closed on Sundays and Mondays, believing that the business will be able to make a decent profit without the staff stretching themselves to the limit.

Regarding The Square Café as "a neighborhood restaurant with a heartbeat," Kane sees as most appropriate it being included on the Old Ship Cook's Kitchen Tour, and as an example of her delight, will host a tasting for all those who drop in.

Tickets for the Old Ship Cook's Kitchen Tour are $18 in advance and may be purchased at Buttonwood Book Store in Cohasset, Bowl and Board, and at Bookport in Hingham Square, Corson's Glass House on Route 53 and the Hingham Public Library on Leavitt Street.

On tour day, tickets will be $20 and only available at Old Ship Parish House, 107 Main St. At that location, as well on tour day, there will be an express line for those holding advance tickets, which can be exchanged for tour booklets with maps.

Hingham man composes patriotic song for anniversary of Sept. 11

Featured in Scituate concert

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Michael Cardoza's first love is writing musicals, but it seemed only natural to branch out and compose a patriotic song for the upcoming first-year anniversary of the September 11 tragedy.

The 15-page piece, "That Truth Shall Keep Us Free," with lyrics by playwright Ross Andrew Dahlberg, will be performed on Saturday, Sept. 7, at a Choral Art Society of Scituate concert in the Scituate High School auditorium.

Mona Lisa Records of Boston will record the performance.

Members of the society will join with singers from other South Shore choruses to honor the victims of the tragedy.

The concert will feature 75 singers, a full orchestra, and professional soloists for the world premiere of well-known composer Fernuccio Germani's "Requiem for September 11."

Cardoza and Dahlberg's song, which has parts for sopranos, altos, tenors, and bass, outlines the history of the country's "hallowed vine of Freedom."

The piece includes the words, "Freedom sings in every soul and Truth shall keep us free" and praises the heroes of Manhattan – "your towers shall rise in time! As Americans on Freedom bent have justice for that crime."

Visual and poetic expressions based on the September 11 theme will be displayed at a reception following the concert.

The concert will also feature 75 singers, a full orchestra, and professional soloists for the world premiere of well-known composer Fernuccio Germani's "Requiem for September 11."

Hingham's Cardoza, who served as organist for the Boston Bruins for three years playing motivating music to excite the sports crowd, majored in arranging and composition at Berklee College of Music.

His wife, well-known singer Nancy Carr, a member of the Choral Art Society, suggested her husband and Dahlberg's song be included in the Sept. 7 performance.

"Michael has been composing for four or five years, and the song is very good," she said. "He's very talented in that area. It's nice that what he had written with Ross was appropriate for the program we're doing."

At Dahlberg's suggestion a few months ago, the two men began putting together the piece for the anniversary of September 11.

"At the time, I thought there wouldn't be a market for it, but we went ahead anyway," said Cardoza, a computer technician who has written several musicals that haven't yet been staged.

"I've liked Broadway musicals all my life," he said. "The goal is to have even a small theatrical group pick up one of our musicals."

Music is a way of life for the entire Cardoza family.

Their daughter, Amanda Carr, a well-known local singer, has sung the "National Anthem" at a Red Sox game and during the South Shore Conservatory's "Evening of the Stars" event. She will also perform the "National Anthem" at the Sept. 7 concert.

Recalling the events of September 11, Cardoza said, "No one can believe the United States could be attacked. We feel so invincible, and all of a sudden, someone breaks our bubble."

Choral Art Society hosts 9-11 concert

The Choral Art Society of Scituate will join with singers from other South Shore choruses to present a concert honoring the victims of the 9/11 tragedy on Saturday, Sept. 7, at 7 p.m., at the Scituate High School Auditorium, on Route 3A in Scituate. Dr. Richard Bunbury will conduct 75 singers, full orchestra and professional soloists in the world premiere of Dr. Ferrucio Germani's 'Requiem for September 11'.

The program also will include excerpts from Mozart's 'Requiem' and patriotic songs, including one composed by Hingham resident, Michael Cardoza. Special guests will include Shannon O'Brien, who will introduce the concert, South Shore Conservatory's Amanda Carr and the New England Treble Chorus. Visual and poetic expressions on the 9/11 theme by local artists will be displayed. A reception will follow the concert.

The concert is a benefit for UNICEF School in a Box program to help re-build schools in Afghanistan. Donations will be accepted at the door or by calling 781-545-8295. The church is fully handicapped accessible and large print programs will be available. For more information call the Society's phone number at 781-837-5547 or visit www.choralartsociety.org/

Lutheran Church holds 9/11 services

"The Rolling Requiem" is a worldwide memorial concert initiated by the Seattle Symphony Chorale. Performance will begin Sept. 11 at 8:46 a.m.—the time of the first attack on the first tower—in each time zone, beginning at the International Date Line and will proceed around the globe, hour by hour, from Bangkok to Boston, Moscow to Montreal, Taipei to Tel Aviv. The performances are dedicated to those lost on Sept. 11 last year, and to the innocent victims caught in the middle of the ensuing war on terrorism.

In the same spirit, the Broad Cove Chorale, now holding rehearsals at House of Prayer Lutheran Church in South Hingham, will participate in a 45-minute ecumenical service of hymns and choral music on the morning of Sept. 11. The service will begin promptly at 8:30 a.m., and at precisely 8:46 a.m., the chorale will perform "Messe Breve" by Leo Delibes. This brief service will end by 9:15 a.m. All are welcome to share in this tribute to the many lost on that day a year ago.

At 7:30 p.m., a Service of Remembrance, Healing and Reconciliation will be observed with the Rev. Paul D. Sinnott, pastor of House of Prayer Church presiding. This service, in remembrance of the tragedy will focus on prayers for peace and for the healing of body and soul. Everyone is welcome.

NSRWA house tour highlights importance of local resources

Beautiful homes and breathtaking vistas.

Visitors will see both on the North and South River Watershed Association's upcoming "River Views House Tour" set for Sept. 8.

The house tour, which the NSRWA holds every other year, will feature six extraordinary homes—two in Pembroke, three in Marshfield and one in Norwell. Each home has its own splendor and many offer wonderful views of the North River and other scenic areas.

"We do this every other year," said watershed president Debbie Lenahan. "It's a big fundraising event for us." All the proceeds go towards support of watershed programs.

One of the Pembroke homes on the tour is called "Wright on the North River," named so because much of its design is based on the architectural styles of renowned architect Frank Lloyd Wright.

NRAS show puts spotlight on eight oil painters

CORRESPONDENT

The 2001 Members Show at the North River Arts Society inadvertently gave rise to a new and distinct members group within the group. Amid the exhibit of general Society works in various media was a section of strictly oil paintings contained on a blue wall area in NRAS's Marshfield Hills gallery hall.

According to NRAS board member Jeanne Horan, the showcase of oil works so distinguished itself that the artists were then christened the "Blue Wall Group."

NRAS has since devoted several smaller shows to collections of oil paintings by the select group of artists. One of them is currently on display at the Dolphin Gallery in the lobby of the Hingham Public Library through Sept. 20.

"The oil paintings together at the Members Show made such a statement that we thought we should form this Blue Wall group," said Horan. "We wanted to put together the oil works in their own exhibits to show them to larger audiences and increase the number of works per artist."

"Spring In the Garden" by Dianne Panerelli Miller is one of 25 oil works on display in the NRAS exhibit "Blue Wall Group" at the Hingham Library's Dolphin Gallery. The exhibit runs through Sept. 20.

"The oil paintings together at the Members Show made such a statement that we thought we should form this Blue Wall group. We wanted to put together the oil works in their own exhibits to show them to larger audiences and increase the number of works per artist."

NRAS board member Jeanne Horan

Titled simply "The Blue Wall Group," the Hingham Library show displays some twenty-five works by eight artists which convey their knowledge of the oil medium with some impressive work. Most of the pieces are true to the characteristics of the medium, allowing the artist to use darker, richer textures of lines and colors than normally afforded by watercolors or acrylics. Subject matter covers the range from landscapes and still lifes to even one portrait.

Among the landscape pieces, a couple of recurring subjects appear. Vivian Harlow's "Swan Boat, Boston" offers a tranquil, sunlit view of its title subject perhaps worthy of a postcard promo shot, while Dianne Panarelli Miller's "Spring In the Garden" portrays the swan boat from a different, more distant angle and under more overcast and, in this rendering, more vividly color- and tone-generating skies.

The popular artists haven of Maine's Monhegan Island is apparently popular subject matter with NRAS members as well. Diane Scott's "Fish Beach, Monhegan" uses dark shades and tones to effectively convey the antiquity of a waterfront boatyard, while Harlow's "Lobster Cove, Monhegan Island"

Sea Note hosts homegrown talent

Scituate's Kara Tondorf, Matt Chase Group headline Sept. 12

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

The spotlight will be on Scituate as the Sea Note hosts a local music showcase Thursday, Sept. 12.

The double-bill of homegrown talent is actually the latest in series of recent collaborative gigs by Scituate friends and fellow musicians —Matt Chase of The Matt Chase Group and singer/songwriter Kara Tondorf. One of those recent shows was a July Fourth Weekend date on the bandstand at Scituate Harbor, which drew a large and appreciative turnout in the waterfront parking lot. The jazzy, jam-friendly sounds of headliners the Chase Group in particular had those docked in the harbor blowing their horns in resounding applause on this occasion.

Together, the Matt Chase Group and Tondorf represent at least the tracings of a new, young crop of career-minded musicians bred in Scituate. Over time, the town has nurtured a small but proud history of musical hometowners made good, including longtime Scituate-based club favorites the Irresponsibles and even going back to the late 1970s and short-lived major label group Private Lightning — anyone remember them?

Thursday's Sea Note revue is what its featured acts are hoping will be — a good look at the future of potential national music-scene faces launched

Rice Indian style

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

For Americans, rice tends to be a rather bland side dish, often overcooked and with nothing more than a bit of salt and butter for flavoring. In India, however, rice takes center stage and is often combined with roasted spices to make it anything but pedestrian. The question was how to do this successfully and easily at home in an American kitchen.

First, let's review what I have learned about rice during years of kitchen testing. The most important discovery I made was that 1 1/2 cups of water per cup of rice is vastly better than the usual 2 to 1 ratio. This lower water/rice ratio produces rice which comes out light and fluffy, not heavy and waterlogged. Second, rice is markedly improved when sautéed briefly in oil before cooking. This also helps to keep the grains separate rather than sticky. Finally, rinsing the rice before cooking helps remove starch, a step which also contributes to a fluffier texture.

Now I wanted to test which spices worked best and how to extract their full flavor. My preference was 3 whole cloves, 1 teaspoon cardamom seeds, 1 teaspoon coriander seeds and a 2-inch piece of cinnamon bark. I also tried onion, shallot, garlic and ginger but I found them unnecessary with the spices. When I tested chicken stock versus water, the latter won out since the rice needed no help from the stock. In terms of oil versus butter, I ended up using both but I vetoed the addition of herbs in the form of cilantro, parsley or chives – the earthy flavors of the spices did not marry well with "greens." Other tests included adding yogurt, nuts, tomato – even beans and small pasta – but the simple mix of spices and rice was always superior.

Toasting the spices, a common recipe step in Indian cooking, was essential to heighten flavors. This worked best over medium heat in saucepan with a tight-fitting lid since I could use the same pan for the rice itself. I also tried grinding the spices after toasting them (except the cinnamon) and adding them back to the rice which added a bit more flavor. Finally, I found that letting the rice sit covered off the heat after about 15 minutes of cooking also helped to produce separate, not sticky, grains. This recipe is particularly good with a simple dinner of grilled meat such as a steak or chops.

RICE WITH PAN-ROASTED SPICES

Basmati rice is preferred but not essential.

1 1/2 cups basmati or long grain rice
1 teaspoon cardamom seeds
1 teaspoon coriander seeds
3 whole cloves
1 2 -inch piece cinnamon bark
1 tablespoon olive oil
2 tablespoons butter
2 1/4 cups water
3/4 teaspoon salt
Freshly ground pepper to taste

1. Place the rice in a large bowl and cover with 2 inches of cold water. Swirl the rice with your hands to help release the dirt and starch from the rice. Pour off the water and repeat until the water runs clear, about 3 times more. Drain in a mesh colander and set aside.

2. Heat a medium saucepan with a tight fitting lid (preferably with a diameter of at least 8 inches) over medium heat. Add the cardamom, coriander, cloves and cinnamon bark and cook until they darken and/or pop, stirring frequently, about 2-3 minutes. (At this point the spices, excluding the cinnamon bark, may optionally be removed, ground, and added back to the saucepan.) Lower the heat to medium-low and add the olive oil and butter. Once the butter has stopped foaming add the rice and sauté, stirring frequently, for about 2 minutes. The rice should be coated with the oil/butter but not browned.

3. Add the water, salt and a few grinds of pepper and stir briefly to combine. Lower the heat as to allow the liquid to simmer. Cover and cook until the liquid is absorbed about 16-18 minutes. (Do not remove the lid during this time.) Remove from the heat and let sit, covered, for an additional 10-15 minutes. Gently fluff the rice with a fork, taste for seasonings and serve immediately. Serves 6-8 as a side dish

"River House Revisited," is another featured house in Pembroke and it dates back to the 1700s, said Lenahan.

The Marshfield homes featured include one on Union Street, one on Cornwell Hill and another on Carlton Road. The sixth home on the tour is on Norwell's Arrowhead Drive.

Professional gardeners and painters will be on hand at each home on the tour route, and Lenahan said several local gardening organizations including the North River Gardeners, the Y'ise and the Scituate Garden Club made contributions.

This is the fourth time the watershed has offered the successful house tour, Lenahan said, noting that in addition to raising funds its important for the NSRWA to provide programs which emphasize the importance of the natural resources around the area.

"People need to recognize that something like the river is a tremendous resource," Lenahan said. "We all live in a pretty amazing place."

"Sometimes we get stuck at certain houses because they're so beautiful that people don't want to leave," added Paula Christie, assistant director at the watershed. "And it's a tour anyone can enjoy."

Lenahan said she brought the idea of doing the house tour to the watershed back in 1994.

"I can't take all the credit," she said. "At the time, I had heard that the VNA was doing a house tour at Christmas" Martha Twigg, executive director of the South Shore Science Center in Norwell was running the tour and Lenehan turned to her for advice.

"I figured we could take that idea and apply it in the summertime," Lenahan said. "I have to give credit to Martha Twigg because she mentored me on the project and helped me put it together."

Since then the tour has grown in popularity each year, she said.

"We sell about 400-500 tickets every time we do it," Lenahan said, adding the event is held rain or shine. "People get so excited when they hear that it's coming up again."

For information on the watershed house tour call (781) 659-8168 or log onto www.nsrwa.org. To buy advance tickets, stop by the Quarterdeck in Scituate, Daylily's in Norwell, Nobles in Hanover, Buckles and Boards in Marshfield or Buttonwoods in Cohasset. Tickets will be available the day of the event (Sept. 8) at Daylily's or the Massachusetts Audubon Society in Marshfield. Advance tickets are $20, $25 on the day of the event.

Various South Shore landscape scenes range from vast panoramic views to quaint, sidewalk and backyard renderings. Among the former, the high-lonesome, marshland view of Susan B. Charles's "Humarock" and the rich tones of Scott's "Along Bass River." Marjorie Osborne Whorf shows a versatility for both the former and latter with the strong color and light interplay of "Hingham Harbor from Belair Road" and "The John Quincy Adams Library in Summer."

The dark intimacy of Panarelli Miller's "Woman Reading," plus a variety of still lifes, most of them floral subjects, by all but a couple of the show's artists, also depict the oil medium's facility for indoor scenes and subjects. Other NRAS artists included in the show are Rita Brace, Susan Davis and Jody Regan.

Fall sales and planting projects

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

A cool, soggy Labor Day weekend provided much needed moisture for our drought-stricken landscapes offering an optimistic outlook for the fall planting season. Although autumn will not officially arrive until later this month, Labor Day is viewed by many as the end of the summer season and with the passing of the holiday weekend, the fall planting season surges ahead at a furious pace.

The months of September and October generally present ideal conditions for a wide variety of gardening activities. Warm soil temperatures, reliable moisture and cooler weather furnish a perfect combination of environmental factors for planting trees, shrubs and perennials and for renovating lawns, gardens and landscapes.

Healthy, fresh nursery stock is arriving daily at our local garden centers, often accompanied by sales on even these prime new trees and shrubs. Many early season perennials, trees and shrubs have been significantly marked down and are just waiting to be adopted. Although some of these plants may not look their best, many just require a little trimming and nurturing to regain their tidy appearance. Plants grown at quality nurseries were probably watered regularly and are merely suffering from the effects of pot culture and a hot, dry summer season. Many well-cared for perennials in our own gardens look equally untidy once past peak bloom, their faded flower stalks and lackluster foliage soon to be replaced by new basal growth once cooler temperatures and consistent moisture predominate. For more costly woody plants, most nurseries offer a guarantee and with substantial reductions available, who can resist the temptation to add a few bargains to their collections?

Should you decide to adopt some of these orphans, be sure you are prepared to provide them the care they require to become established. Mother Nature has been fairly generous with moisture in the past week or two, but water restrictions are still in effect in many communities and the ability to water newly set plants is critical for their survival. Incorporate substantial organic material into your planting soils in the form of compost, manure, and organic peat, water deeply on a regular basis and apply a layer of mulch around the base of the plant to retain moisture, maintain even soil temperatures and reduce weed germination.

A very special plant sale event is in the offering at the University of Massachusetts Field Station, 240 Beaver St., Waltham, Sunday, Sept. 15 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., rain or shine. More than 20 plant societies and horticultural organizations are sponsoring a tremendous joint venture that will afford plant enthusiasts an opportunity to shop for a wide variety of specialty plants usually unavailable at local nurseries. The majority of the plants offered have been grown locally and freshly dug for the event and knowledgeable growers will be on site to provide valuable cultural information and describe the plants in detail. House plants, perennials, rock garden plants, bulbs, shrubs, trees, bamboo and garden art will all be available. It should be emphasized that most of these plants are not difficult to grow. They are merely less available from local sources.

With so many new cultivars on the market in recent ! years, nurseries could not possibly begin to stock even a small percentage of these new introductions and must pick and choose better known, tried and true plants. The Society Row Plant Sale is a golden opportunity to discover some of these unique treasures.

in Scituate. Providing an interesting counterpoint to the Chase Group's "retro-70s" jazz-rock style will be opening act Kara Tondorf, an edgy, emotive alterna-folk-rocking songstress who's recently spent most of her time in Los Angeles and touring nationally, promoting her debut independent CD release I Like Your Face.

"I went out to L.A. last year, and I managed to land dates in most of the best clubs for new singer/songwriters there, I met a lot of people in the industry, and I got a lot of calls," said Tondorf, who attended Scituate High School with Matt Chase in the mid '90s.

"Some of the clubs I've played include the Knitting Factory, the Mint and the Crooked Bar, which is down on the Sunset Strip. The L.A. scene has always been a lot closer to the music industry center, and more the place to be heard, than Boston. But Boston has always been a tight-knit music community, and I would say more supportive among the musicians in general."

Tondorf has been well-praised in the alternative music press for her intensely personal songwriting and category-defying acoustic/pop/rock/folk style. L.A.'s Music Connection magazine voted her debut disc the #2 CD of 2001, while other reviewers have compared her writing style to Ani DiFranco, Bob Dylan and Patti Smith. A sampling of Tondorf's lyrical wit and tone can be found in this rhyme from "Sunset Drive" on the debut disc, "I'm a recovering Catholic, but I'm healing just fine/I'd love to share my thoughts with you, but you never give me time."

"I'd generally describe my music as folky, and highly concentrated on lyrics and musical dynamics," Tondorf said. "I listen to and draw from everything from early blues and jazz to modern music. My musical tastes tend to get stuck in the '60s and '70s, for the most part. But the main idea behind my songwriting is to trigger some emotion in other people."

Tondorf has started writing material for her follow up CD and is planning a disc release party for sometime in the fall, probably, she said, at Cambridge's House of Blues.

"The next CD will be more folky, more acoustic, and less band-oriented than my first one was," she said.

The I Like Your Face CD is available online at folkweb.com and CDbaby.com as well as at Tondorf's live shows. Tondorf will play the Sea Note Thursday, Sept. 12. The Sea Note is located at 159 Nantasket Avenue. All shows start at 9:30 p.m. Age 21 and over admitted. For more information call 781-749-3989 or email: theseanote@aol.com

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 4

Today's planetary combination continues to generate high spirits, optimism. The green light is on for new starts across the board. It is best to launch important enterprises before 10:52 a.m., when the Leo moon aligns with expansive Jupiter. A Mercury/Neptune alignment stimulates creative thinking, intuition. Trust your first impression; your instincts are on target. Be sure to take time out for fun and games; enjoy favorite sports, hobbies, friends.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 5

The moon continues to travel in Leo. However, a harmonious alignment of Venus and Saturn adds an element of realism and practicality to today's planetary picture. This morning is prime for making commitments to others, selling or buying property or handling major business transactions. Plan to initiate before 10:26 a.m., when this alignment occurs. Lunar contacts to Saturn and Venus set the stage for a romantic evening. The Leo moon becomes inactive at 9:33 p.m.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 6

Storm clouds move in, making for a day that has its pitfalls. Others may be moody, distracted, depressed. Don't overpersonalize. Plan a busy work schedule. Finish projects already begun, review and redo, clean and reorganize. At 12:16 a.m. the moon enters Virgo, and aligns with Mars at 8:21 a.m. Choose your words carefully. Compliments will work better than criticism. The new moon culminates at 11:10 p.m., 14-degrees of Virgo.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 7

Gear up for another challenging day. Resolve to maintain an easygoing, peaceful demeanor. Keep your mind and hands busy. This is a day for tackling projects that need a finishing touch, repair, renovation or redoing. New starts are off limits. The Virgo moon forms a 90-degree alignment to Pluto in the morning and to Saturn at 8:54 p.m., when it becomes inactive. In addition, the sun forms a 90-degree contact to Pluto. Venus enters Scorpio at 11:05 p.m., and the moon enters Libra at 11:57 p.m.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 8

Astrological weather turns fair and sunny today. The Libra moon forms flowing contacts to Jupiter, Neptune, Mercury and Pluto. Social and romantic activities get the green light. New starts are recommended in your business or personal life. Take a vacation from stress and worry; relax and enjoy life to the fullest.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 9

Planetary influences continue to rate high across the board. The Libra moon forms harmonious contacts to Uranus and Saturn until 8:52 p.m., when it becomes inactive. Relationship issues may take center stage. Influences are prime for developing and strengthening existing partnerships or for making new contacts, establishing new liaisons. You can also make progress developing projects that require moral or financial support from others. Planetary influences turn around completely at 11:48 p.m., when the moon enters emotional Scorpio.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 10

The best way to channel today's planetary energies is to work. Stay busy with practical projects. Finish old business rather than starting anything new. Lunar alignments to Jupiter and Neptune midday warn against overdoing, jumping to conclusions. Most likely, you don't have all the facts. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action until Thursday. Spend time alone this evening; meditate for inner peace and vision.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 11

Pursue activities that help you to maintain a peaceful, positive attitude this morning. Jupiter opposes Neptune at 8:07 a.m., and the moon continues its travel in intensive Scorpio. Take time out for yourself; reflect on and learn from past experiences. Open your heart to higher visions. Read yesterday's advice. The Scorpio moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive at 6:52 p.m.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 12

The moon enters Sagittarius at 1:44 a.m., generating a lighter, brighter mood today and tomorrow. It is best to start new activities before 5:04 p.m., when the moon aligns with Jupiter, the planetary ruler of Sagittarius. On the other hand, don't go to extremes or make foolish promises or purchases. Use common sense. A lunar alignment to Mars at 5:28 p.m. warns you to drive defensively and be extra cautious when operating machinery. The remainder of the evening rates high for fun and games.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 13

It may be difficult to focus on practical matters and be productive today. Try to get work projects out of the way early in the day, so that you can spend extra time enjoying favorite sports and hobbies. The first quarter moon occurs at 2:08 p.m. A full moon is building up and will culminate September 21. The Sagittarius moon continues to generate an upbeat, adventurous mood. A lunar alignment to Uranus makes this a great evening for partying. Take a walk on the wild side.

A Cohasset firefighter holds Old Glory during the town's observance of the first anniversary of September 11. More than 500 people attended the event on the common yesterday.

Town pays quiet tribute to 9-11 victims

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Under overcast skies that after two days of bright sunlight seemed respectfully sorrowful, the flag on Cohasset's Town Common writhed against a terse breeze that was neither strong enough to set it out full, nor peaceful enough to let it rest.

The estimated 500 people in attendance, much like the flag, stood silently on the one-year-anniversary of the terrorist attacks on Sept. 11, grappling with an event that has forever removed sense of security that had existed in America.

Throughout the event, silence prevailed. Heads stayed riveted towards for the flag for 10 full minutes as the church bells tolled. The bells, too, seemed uncomfortable. From the belfries of The First Parish, Second Congregational Church, St. Stephen's Church, the Beechwood Congregational and St. Anthony's Church cascaded a inconsistently rhythmic call and reply, each unexpected chime managing to prod and poke awareness of the moment for the length of the ceremony. Even the littlest children seemed aware of the moment, and remained quiet and subdued with a restraint well beyond their years or comprehension.

During the moment of silence a jet rumbled overhead, a subtle reminder of how much our world has changed. The playing of taps on trumpet provided a proper ending to the ceremony.

Town to buy Barnes estate

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The town has taken a big step forwards to ensuring the sanctity of Wheelwright Park.

Last week, the Board of Selectmen, thanks to negotiations by the Community Preservation Committee, signed a purchase and sales agreement pending a Town Meeting vote with the Barnes family to purchase a 32-acre parcel of forest area known as the Barnes property.

The area is significant, because it is just to the south of Wheelwright Park and part of a continuous forest area that stretches from the edges of the Holly Hill Farm to the fringes of development off North Main and Forest streets. The deep forest aspect of the land makes it invaluable to the survival of the delicate ecosystem within. Any development would have a severe impact on Wheelwright Park.

"I think a lot of people have wanted the Barnes property, with its association with Wheelright Park," said Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan. "People have talked about it for years and years and years, but it only came up for sale recently. We have an opportunity to get it and I think that everyone is kind of rallying around and likes the idea of acquiring that piece of property."

Treasurer's race may bring out the voters on Tuesday

20 percent turnout expected

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The race for state treasurer could be the biggest draw in Tuesday's state Primary here in Cohasset.

Beach Street resident Bruce Herzfelder – a local businessman who is married to Ellen Roy, a member of one of the town's most prominent families – is vying for the Republican Party nomination with Dan Grabauskas of Ipswich, the former head of the state Registry of Motor Vehicles.

The winner will face off with one of four Democrats that would also like to succeed current treasurer Shannon O'Brien, who is in a four-way race for her party's nomination for governor.

O'Brien of Whitman is the current Democratic favorite, according to pollsters, to go up against Republican Mitt Romney of Belmont, who is unopposed in the Republican Primary. However, Romney's running mate, Kerry Healey faces a tough challenge from

Anti-40B group gets signatures

Will be on STM warrant

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

November's Special Town Meeting isn't just going to be about unpaid bills for this fiscal year. Voters can bank on the fact that Cohasset Action, a new citizens group organized to fight Chapter 40B, will take the floor.

Chapter 40-B is the state's affordable housing law that allows companies like AvalonBay to apply for comprehensive permits that skirt most local zoning regulations to construct high-density housing in exchange for providing some affordable housing.

Group members have collected more than 200 signatures to force a Special Town Meeting of their own, but at selectmen's request have agreed to be part of the scheduled Nov. 18 Special Town Meeting in exchange for their articles being placed at numbers 3 and 4 on the warrant.

Voters can expect two articles from Cohasset Action. One will ask voters to direct town boards to implement an affordable housing plan and the other will ask voters to adopt a moratorium on 40B projects until the town adopts and implements an affordable housing plan.

The group also hopes to have a good showing of concerned citizens at the AvalonBay hearing

Planning Board, 7:30 p.m. Wed., Sept. 18,.

Democratic Town Committee, 9 a.m., Sat., Sept. 21

Youth Resources Committee, 7 p.m., Wed. Sept. 25

Conservation Commission, Thursday, Sept. 26 at 7:30 p.m.

All meetings are at Town Hall unless otherwise indicated.

Public invited to tour new schools

Supt. Edward Malvey, the School Committee and the School Building Committee are extending an invitation to all interested citizens for walking tours of the newly finished sections of the middle-high and Deer Hill school construction projects.

Unguided tours of both schools are scheduled for 6-8 p.m., Wed., Sept. 18 and for 8:30-10:30 a.m., Saturday, Sept. 21. Although visitors will be on their own, someone will be available to answer questions, Malvey said.

Anyone with questions, should call Malvey's office at 781-383-6111.

Haddad backed on common benches

Town Manager Mark Haddad received support this week for his decision to place benches on the Town Common.

The benches were installed last spring near Long Road despite opposition from the Common Historic District Commission, which agreed to allow the benches only if they were placed on the patch of grass in front of Town Hall.

Forty people signed a petition circulated by Anna Abbruzzese of 155 Border St., and Hamilton Tewksbury of 81 Elm St. sent a letter commending Haddad for the decision.

In Abbruzzese's cover letter, she takes offense that the placement off the common would protect senior citizens from errant Frisbees, as the CHDC stated in a letter to selectmen.

"As for the safety of seniors give us a little credit," said Abbruzzese. "We might be able to toss that Frisbee if it came towards us!"

Tewksbury noted that the Town Common should be available for use by all of the town's population and praised Haddad.

"You deserve a pat on the back for this addition to Cohasset's Common," said Tewksbury.

Haddad said the benches cost about $400 and were installed at his direction by the DPW.

40B ZBA-Avalon schedule listed

The Zoning Board of Appeals has scheduled the following 40-B meetings related to the AvalonBay project:

8:30 p.m., Monday, Sept. 16 (preliminary discussion)

10 a.m., Saturday, Sept. 21 (site visit, 155 King St.)

7:30 p.m., Monday, Sept. 23 (Avalon's presentation)

7:30 p.m., Monday, Oct. 28 (Avalon's presentation)

Nov. 18 - Special Town Meeting

7:30 p.m., Monday, Dec. 16 (input from various town boards)

Meeting dates are subject to change. All meetings, with the exception of the site visit and Special Town Meeting, will be held in the selectmen's office and will be televised.

Fall town meeting set

The Fall Special Town Meeting will be held on Nov. 18 at the new auditorium at the middle-high school.

"According to our bylaws, citizen petition articles for special town meeting must come in within seven days of the coming of the town meeting," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "So, residents have until Tuesday, Sept. 17 at 4:30 to get their warrant articles in this office if they want them on the warrant."

Town boards and committees will have an additional week to submit articles for inclusion on the warrant.

Dunkin Donuts stays open late

The Board of Selectmen has granted the request of Cohasset Donuts, LLC, the franchisees of the Dunkin Donuts located in Cohasset Plaza on 3A, to extend the hours of its operation until midnight. Currently, the doughnut shop is open from 5 a.m. until 11 p.m.

The motion passed with a 4-1 vote, with Selectman Tom Callahan dissenting.

The change in time did not concern Police Chief Robert Jackson, who was in attendance at the meeting for another matter.

"I haven't had any problems there," said Jackson. "I wouldn't have any problem with that."

Sewer plant looks need public input

The Board of Selectmen expressed reservations over the Sewer Commission's plan for the beautification of the wastewater treatment plant in the marsh off Elm Street/

Dan Coughlin, of Tutela Engineering, presented the Sewer Commission's plans for the renovation, but the selectmen balked at the fact that the bid for the project had already been put out.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan is concerned that the public has not had an adequate chance to comment on the plan. Selectman Tom Callahan expressed concern that the expenditure — estimated at between $180,000 and $230,000 by Coughlin — does little to change the appearance of the building.

"It's an insane expenditure of money if it is going to look just like the building we have out there," said Callahan.

The selectmen have asked the Sewer Commission to add an addendum that would postpone the bid process by one month, which would be Oct. 26, in order to hold a meeting and solicit public comment.

Two more retirements OK'd

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Nearly two months after the Board of Selectmen decided to opt-in to the state's early retirement program, it appears the matter is finally settled.

Initially, the town included two Group 4 positions in the program, because both were firefighters and would be replace by paramedics which would allow the town to raise the ambulance rates. However, Elizabeth Soule, sister of custodian Kevin Soule complained that the decision to exclude Group 1 employees was unfair. The town has not Group 2 or 3 employees.

The law, known officially as Chapter 116, is intended to be a cost-saving measure for cash-strapped towns. Ideally, a person would take an early retirement and the position would not be filled.

The selectmen voted for the two firefighters because of the cost benefit and decided not to include Soule, who falls under the jurisdiction of the school department, under the recommendation of the school superintendent.

"The school superintendent had made a recommendation," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "I brought that to the board and the board acted on it. Then for whatever reason, the School Committee changed their recommendation, which is there right, which was fine."

But in the course of the publicity over the Soule retirement, the second in line in terms of seniority, Kenneth Sargent, who works for the DPW, asked to be included as well.

Last night, the board voted 4-1 in favor of amending its earlier decision to exclude Group 1 members and to include two members, Soule and Sargent.

"When Mr. Sargent came before the board, it's a matter of fairness," said Haddad. "I think the board acted properly last night."

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said he felt good that the board was able to help out two dedicated employees (Soule has 35 years working for the town and Sargent 30).

"I think in the case where there is minimal expense to the town," said Sullivan. "If somebody wants to retire early and we are able to increase the amount of money that they are going to retire with, I think that's good for them."

Soule's retirement, which will come from the school budget, will cost $7,000 in fiscal year 2003; and Sargent will cost the town $1,869, Haddad said.

Not everyone was happy though.

"The decision to let the two Group 1 employees is clearly against the intent of the law," said Selectman Tom Callahan who dissented. "I simply thought it was the wrong decision."

That is not to say Callahan was against the individual's retirement personally.

"I'm very sympathetic to the two individuals and appreciative of the years of service," said Callahan, noting that not including the employees in the plan did not prevent them from retiring, but rather from retiring under the benefits of the legislation. "But the town was not supposed to be taking a financial hit to do this and I think that it is wrong that the taxpayers have to bear an expense for it."

Elizabeth Soule is glad that the process is over.

"This was good, this was fair," said Soule. "Now we just have to get the paperwork straightened out."

Sargent was also excited by the development.

"I just put it in (his request to be included) when they rescinded the other part," said Sargent. "I was going to retire in two years anyway. It makes a big difference percentage wise, because I will be considered 65."

Callahan was upset at the way the complaints were handled by Elizabeth Soule

"The one particular retirement (Soule's) was accompanied by a campaign of letters and pressure brought upon people to make the decision that was made," said Callahan. "I can't divorce my decision from the context of how this all came about. I don't think that the employee can divorce himself from the letters that were written on his behalf. They were vitriolic, they were personally insulting to the town manager, the board of selectmen and frankly to anybody in town who voted for the school project.

Callahan said Elizabeth Soule completely misunderstood the law, mischaracterized how the decision the board made originally was made and why it was made.

"I don't think we should make public policy in response to that kind of pressure and the kind of insults and threats and innuendo was made," he said. "I just think it is the wrong message to send to people to think that they can get away with things like that."

Wastewater panel to unplug problems with septic issues

Volunteers sought from new districts

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Spectacular ledge is one of the traits that makes Cohasset uniquely beautiful.

But, no matter how lovely, ledge is unfriendly to drainage and therefore, the disposal of wastewater.

Combine rocky terrain with poor soil conditions and wetlands and you have a septic system nightmare.

So it's no secret that lack of adequate sewer capacity for this lovely seaside town has been the topic of a lawsuit with the state and innumerable newspapers stories for more than 20 years — never mind the headaches homeowners have faced if they must replace their septic system.

Now with the North Cohasset connected to the Hull Sewer Treatment Plant and the expanded Central Cohasset Sewer System – a good part of the town's wastewater woes have been solved for the time being.

But there are still lots of neighborhoods around town with wastewater problems and the selectmen want to have a plan to help deal with those issues. Also the inter-municipal sewer agreement with Hull expires in 30 years, begging the question: should the town renegotiate the contract or look into constructing a satellite treatment plant?

The answer to that question and more could come from the newly formed Wastewater Committee that will include representatives from the Board of Selectmen, Board of Health, Sewer Commission, Chamber of Commerce and six neighborhoods or districts.

Selectmen are seeking volunteers to serve on the committee from the following areas:

- Brewster Road District
- Beechwood District
- Little Harbor District
- Forest Avenue (West Corner District)
- South Main Street District
- Sohier/Fairoaks/Rose Hill District

Volunteers should contact the Selectmen's Office at 781-383-4105 or stop by Town Hall. The office is on the second floor.

The committee will make recommendations to the Board of Selectmen to:

- Identify areas that fall into logical districts in terms of wastewater needs and problems
- Study available technical options for disposing of wastewater
- Investigate available options, and develop the outline of a logical plan that would efficiently and economically manage wastewater disposal requirements
- Address existing or potential problems

"Should we look at joint septic systems or satellite plants?" Selectman Merle Brown asks. "Should we stay with grinder pumps or go with a different type?" These are just a few of the questions, Brown hopes the new board can answer.

He also points out the town is paying 50 percent of the cost of the installation of the sewers, but those replacing septic systems have to foot the entire bill. He hopes the new committee will also look into how wastewater solutions should be paid for.

Expansion not on DiNero's plate

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Zoning Board of Appeals has denied DiNero's request to expand its restaurant building and parking lot.

In a Sept. 3 decision, the ZBA denied DiNero's application for a special permit to expand the building because the addition would cause an increase in traffic congestion along busy Hull Street. The board also stated the 26-foot-long extension of a wall that is only about 4-1/2 feet from the street would present a "significant danger to cars and pedestrians." DiNero's currently doesn't meet the 15-foot minimum setback requirements and was seeking a special permit to "expand a preexisting non-conforming structure." The restaurant asked to add 1,242 square feet to the south of the existing building.

The ZBA did grant DiNero's a variance to lay out a parking lot using parking spaces that are a foot shorter than required but only on the condition that the ledge on the premises not be disturbed in any way. DiNero's sought to clear some 2,600 cubic yards of ledge to expand the parking lot and increase the number of spaces to go along with the proposed expansion.

The ZBA said the bylaw prohibits the removal of more than 10 cubic yards of ledge from the site. DiNero's said if necessary, all the ledge would be crushed and remain on site, but no plan for that solution was presented, the board stated in its decision.

The ZBA said no variance was required for the placement of a second 19-square-foot sign on the south-front of the building.

DiNero's has 20 days from the date the decision was filed with the Town Clerk to appeal. DiNero's officials could not be reached for comment by press time.

Does MCAS pass the test?

School board seeks opinions

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The School Committee has decided to seek out public opinion on the state-wide testing program, the MCAS. This year is the first year that passing the 10th-grade test will be a graduation requirement.

During a general discussion on the topic last week in response to an article and editorial published in the Mariner, Vice-Chairman Chartis Tebbetts raised the question of trying to ascertain where the public stands on the issue.

"It is an issue that our School Committee is asked to vote on in our conference every fall," said Tebbetts. "It would be a natural reaction for us as a committee to be supportive of the test because we do so well, but I think that there are some issues that have come up to me that raise questions."

For Tebbetts, those questions revolve around the use of a single assessment tool across a varied student body.

"It's really not a good way to assess students who are not going traditionally through the school system, like special needs students or vocational technical students," said Tebbetts. "We really should find out what the parents of Cohasset think about this one-test-for-a-diploma system."

Tebbetts is also concerned about the schools "teaching to the frameworks," and missing out on creative educational opportunities.

"It is good to have a dialogue with parents as to what their sense is (as to MCAS)," said Tebbetts. "It is always good to do this out in front of the people to show that we don't just march along and do what we are told.

The board agreed that research could be helpful and is asking anybody who wishes to comment to contact one of the committee members by phone.

The numbers are: Mark DeGiacomo – 383-6413;Pat Martin - 383-3279; Rick Flynn -383-6754; Chartis Tebbetts - 383-1662; and Jane Pescatore - 383-2660.

Don't miss the free talk on 'Bully Busters' Sept. 20

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

INSPIRATIONAL SIGHT

An amazing sight to see down near the Cohasset Common is the flag at the Murphy's home. This flag flew over Ground Zero on Armistice Day. It was a gift from Jim's cousin Dan, who has been involved in rescue and clean-up operations since September 11. Truly an inspirational and emotional sight to see.

'BULLY BUSTERS'

Every other Friday beginning Sept. 20 from noon to 1p.m.at the beautiful Dillon Gallery in the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset Village a different speaker will be presented. The first week's featured speaker is Dr. Alan Jacobson, a psychologist that offers a Parent Workshop titled "Bully Busters." Dr. Jacobson is Director of Outpatient Services at BayView Associates and holds a clinical appointment at McLean Hospital.

Recent surveys have rated bullying as a leading cause of stress and involves a majority of students. Dr. Jacobson offers parents strategies to deal with children that have been bullied and teaches methods to open lines of communication and build assertiveness and self-esteem.

This informal talk is open to everyone, there is no fee, and feel free to bring a snack or your lunch. A brief Q &A will follow. Sponsored by the Social Service League of Cohasset Donations can voluntarily be made at the South Shore Art Center.For more info call 781-383-0771

SPECIAL YARD SALE

The South Shore Community Center will hold its first annual Yard Sale on Sept. 14 from 9 a.m.-2 p.m. at the SSCC located at 3 Main St. The SSCC is seeking donations (no clothing), which are tax deductible, for the Yard Sale with all proceeds going to support the> Center.

Donors can drop off items at the SSCC from Sept. 9-13 between 9 a.m. to noon each day. For questions, please contact the SSCC at 781-383-0088. Thank you in advance for making this first annual event a success! Yard sales are so much fun and you never know what can be found. Come on down on Saturday and see what treasures you could bring home.

LIBRARY KUDOS

A big thank you to Jenna Fegreus for holding a book-discussion group this summer and a big thank you to Marjie Murphy for an encore of "The Puzzle Club". Both contributed to the creative summer entertainment sponsored by the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Sharon Moody, the children's librarian, is so happy to have been able to offer these programs and work with such dedicated and talented folks.

FOOTBALL TICKETS

Anyone who would like to attend the High School football game, this is the last call for discounted tickets to the football game on Nantucket this Sat as well as last call for ads to be placed in the football program...Call Dennis Dooley 781-383-6448.

GET WELL WISHES

Capt John E. Woods, a longtime resident of Cohasset, is currently living in Port Charlotte, Fla. and is seriously ill with cancer. Any of his friends from Cohasset are welcome to send cards. John's address is: 21491 Landis Ave, Port Charlotte FL, 33954. I know John would be glad to hear from any of his old friends. If you know Capt. Woods, this would be a wonderful way to let him know that Cohasset is thinking of him.

CHICKEN AND BLUEBERRIES

The Beechwood Congregational church is having its annual chicken barbecue/ blueberry festival on Friday, Sept. 13 at 6:30 p.m.. Bring a wrapped item weighing a pound to be auctioned off after dinner. Tickets are $8 for adults and $4 for children. Reservations should be made by calling 781-383-1298.

WEDDING MARCH

The bride (Holly Pompeo) and groom (Shawn Rayden), along with the wedding party, take a stroll across Cohasset Common on their way to the reception at the Red Lion Inn. The wedding was held Sept. 1 at the Second Congregational Church.

PET PARADE

Mark your calendar! Calling all animals, big or small, real or stuffed! The Farmers' Market second annual dog show and costume parade is Sept. 16 on the Town Common! You can dress up as a family, individually or just your pet. It is a fun time for all!

ROARING 20S PARTY

A Roaring 20s Garden Party and Antique Car Parade will be held Sept. 22 from 3 to 7 p.m. Lions Gate, the Cohasset estate of Diane and Robert Johnston.

The event will benefit Our World, the children's global discovery museum that will soon be under construction in a two-story wing of the former Joseph Osgood School. The hands-on museum and a related global-themed playpark are set to open in the fall of 2003.

Lions Gate, the site of the garden party, is a four-story American Gothic mansion built in 1904 for shoe magnate Thomas Gustave Plant and his wife, Carolyn.

Plant later built "Castle in the Clouds," a sister house to Lions Gate, in New Hampshire. A frequent guest there was Teddy Roosevelt.

Carolyn Plant remained at the Cohasset house, which she surrounded with beautiful gardens. Those gardens have been restored, along with the house itself.

Period dress (1900-1920s) is encouraged for this event, but optional. After a parade through town, the antique cars will be parked around the estate's circular drive. Violin soloist Eugene Kaplan will entertain and works by well-known portrait artist Peter Quidley will be on exhibit. Refreshments will be served.

The cost for the benefit is $150 per ticket, much of which is tax deductible. For further information, call 781-383-3198. Reservations by check or credit card can be sent to Our World, P.O. Box 422, Cohasset, 02025.

This week is very hard for me to write about as it just brings the emotions that are inside right to the front again. I cannot believe that a year has gone by and that we are in a heightened sense of security to the point of so much fear. I am scared, saddened and angered that this is the way we live now and my feelings and sympathy are with the families who have lost so much and also, to the families who have loved ones fighting for our country and working on keeping our country safe.

I am also so sad and concerned for our children as they try to make sense of all of this and realize the importance 10 times over of reassuring, comforting and keeping the routines going that help for our children to feel safe. In this day and age, that becomes a harder and harder task to do.

That is all for this week. Make sure to send all information to me no later than Mondays at noon.

Protecting everything you own for everyone you love takes more than quick fixes.

Pat McDermott has what it takes.

The Registry of Probate archives wills, divorce, adoption, child custody and support records, and more. Everything you own, for everyone you love. Trust the safekeeping of these critical documents to an attorney with:

- Years of experience as an administrator and a public servant
- A proven record in modernizing and streamlining a County Registry
- Reasonable, fiscally sound and achievable plans to modernize the Registry

Pat McDermott will centralize the system in a modern, flexible data bank — not just place desks in courtroom basements.

Protect everything you own and everyone you love. Elect Pat McDermott Norfolk County Register of Probate.

"...the driving force behind the improvements at the Registry of Deeds. He'll do a great job as Register of Probate."
— the late Paul Harold, Norfolk Register of Deeds, 2000-2002

"Pat has the legal and administrative background to be a successful Register...I am proud to endorse his candidacy."

Rising from the ashes

So much has been said and written in the last few days about the horrific events of Sept. 11, 2001. Yet words seem so inadequate to describe the unspeakable tragedy, the unbearable loss suffered by so many and the amazing resilience of the American spirit.

Even though you tell yourself you're not going to watch another 9/11 memorial show, or read another tribute story, you can't help but get caught up in the drama and sadness. It's like reliving that tragic day over and over again. But many of us are detached from the actual pain, not having lost a loved one on that fateful day. For those who did lose a husband, wife, son, daughter, mother or father in New York, Washington or Pennsylvania, their loss is unimaginable. The pain of having to relive the event — watching on TV as countless stations replay the moments when the planes hit the World Trade Center — must be more than they can bear.

Somehow, though, through it all many of the survivors have been remarkable examples of poise and courage. You read and hear their stories, marveling and in awe of their strength and character. As we mark this first anniversary, our thoughts and hearts should be with the survivors of that day and the victims' families.

In our own ways, we can remember them today and throughout the week — whether it be by wearing red, white and blue, displaying the flag, lighting a simple candle or offering up prayers. They need to know the American people will never forget. They need to know we feel, in some small way, the pain and loss they bear.

As the Rev. Ken Read-Brown of Hingham so aptly said in this week's paper, we are all connected by this. It is a bond we would rather not share, but it is a bond nonetheless.

And as many of us get caught up in the sorrow and tragedy of Sept. 11 and question how this could happen, we can be somehow comforted by Rev. Read-Brown's words:

"We are profoundly related to one another and to all life. Once again, as we humans have done before, we need to act as if we knew it — to answer hate with love, to answer destruction with new creation. It will not be easy. It has never been easy. But how else would we choose to live?"

Marshfield psychologist Nate Murray also reminds us in any crisis or tragedy, "there are positive things that occur in that people begin to recognize the importance of having a sense of community, having relationships and being tolerant of other people. They realize how precious and fragile our time is here."

Living and carrying on, in the end, will speak volumes about the American people and their ability to rise above the devastation. It's unfortunate if we forever associate Sept. 11 with death and destruction. It does a disservice to the memories of those lost and those left behind.

COHASSET REFLECTS ON SEPTEMBER 11

Twin Towers

In the past I remember:
Waking up with dreams meant I've slept.
After that day in September:
Tossing and turning means I've wept
For twin towers burning in the day,
Tiny figures gazing, hapless turning for a way
Over orange flames above and below
To escape, to flee, but nowhere to go!
Orange flames pouring from a ruptured side,
Black clouds forming, swirling and then ride
The portentous billowing toward the sky.
Before the question how and why
In slow motion in a dream without sound
Everything dissolves and crumbles to the ground.
Try as I might to escape the dream's glare
The vision inscribed a looming nightmare.
With the dust of the vanished towers
It is clear the nightmare is ours!

— Uve Friederich
38 Forest Ave.

From a lifetime New Yorker

The Mariner's call for reflection prompted me to pull out some photographs I had taken during the time that ensued post Sept. 11. As a lifetime, New Yorker, I could not help but remember, now as I had then, how touched and proud I was by our local communities' response to the tragedy. The display of a giant, yet tattered, American flag hung proudly from a crane; the strength reflected in the handwritten posters urging participation in the grass root efforts of a neighborhood New York fund-raiser; the cessation of construction long enough to mark a moment of remembrance; and finally, perhaps the most poignant, a neighbor's gentle placement of our flag in the hands of a child .

These crude "snapshots" helped our family remember the purity and spontaneous goodness demonstrated by our families and local citizens. It is the preservation of that sentiment which will guide us forward.

GREENBUSH QUESTION OF THE WEEK

Can you tell us about the recreational bike trail proposed for Cohasset?

The MBTA will plan, design and construct a recreational bike trail along an old rail spur across from the driveway into the Cohasset Station off Route 3A. The paved trail will be eight-to-10 feet wide and about 7,000 feet (1-1/2 miles) long and will stretch from 3A into Wompatuck State Park.

If you have a Greenbush question that others may be interested in, email Mary Ford at mford@cnc.com or call the Greenbush hotline at 781-682-6350.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Grateful to the Firemen's Association

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset Recreation Department is appreciative to various town departments and individuals who have lent their time, effort and experience in support of our services this summer.

The Cohasset Recreation Department and staff wish to thank the many individual of the Cohasset Firemen's Association for their generous donations to the Playground Program's annual barbecue.

Their support, involvements and extremely thoughtful contribution to the children and program is greatly appreciated. The youngsters and employees of this Recreation program are truly indebted for their interest in our community.

Again, our very sincere thanks to the Cohasset Firemen's Association for their magnanimous efforts and donations.

Highway lunacy

TO THE EDITOR:

I think it would be fun to award yearly, an "Idiot of the Year Award," asking your readers to nominate anyone in the public sector for this award.

For example, this is my nomination for this year's "Idiot of the Year Award": the person in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts' Department of Highways that was awarded, in the same season, the repair of the bridge on Route 3A at Hingham Rotary; the reconstruction of Route 228 through Hingham and the resurfacing of Route 3A through Hingham.

As difficult as it was during the summer months to traverse this obstacle course of detours, now that school buses travel the same course, it is truly a challenge to get from here to there.

On more than one occasion, I had to go through Norwell, via Beechwood Street in Cohasset to get to the boat at Hingham Shipyard. Since most gasoline taxes are used to pay for road construction, perhaps that gentleman is smarter than I in forcing me through detours to burn more gasoline on a, normally five-mile trip, to a 15-mile trip on a daily basis.

Especially smart on the part of the responsible person was to award the two reconstruction road jobs to the same company. That enabled the company to do some work on both jobs, stretching their crews out to the max.

No doubt in my mind, this person at the Department of Highways deserves this "Idiot of the Year Award!"

Legal counsel needed

DEAR MR. CHITTICK, CHAIRMAN
ZONING BOARD OF APPEALS

As Chairman of the Zoning Board of Appeals, I urge you to request from the Board or Selectmen the necessary financial means to hire legal counsel and experienced consultants to help research the impact that a project like the one proposed by Avalon Bay, will have on Cohasset.

My concern is that for every Avalon Bay developer at our doorstep, another is soon to follow. It is imperative that we thoroughly research this matter and develop a plan that is consistent with the needs of the town. I urge you to take control of the future of Cohasset and not leave it to the fate of developers operating under the guise of 40B.

I ask that you consider the impact a development of this size could have on Cohasset. This project will ultimately raise taxes with the addition of school children and drain town resources. The resulting population increase will be more than the town has grown in 10 years; all without local control.

There are many issues to consider and viable solutions. We need affordable housing, especially for local seniors, but the town of Cohasset, should determine how and where these needs are addressed. Don't let this be something we all live to regret. I respectfully ask you to allocate the financial resources necessary to fully review this project and other affordable housing alternatives.

Monique Armstrong

Editor's note: Mrs. Armstrong provided The Mariner with a copy of her letter.

Remember to vote Tuesday!

TO THE EDITOR:

Our long hot summer is almost over and fall elections are closing on us. Unlike political parties or issue oriented special interest groups, the 'Get Out The Vote' efforts of the Hingham League of Women voters are not about influencing the outcome of campaigns but about increasing civic participation.

Our goals include informing voters and producing an electorate that is larger, more diverse and more representative of town and state and country than ever before. The percentage of Hingham voters in a non-presidential primary has never been high. Remember your vote does count. We live in a time when voter confidence in the political system is low, voter apathy is high and public cynicism is rampant. Make your voice heard at the ballot box - a vibrant, responsive democracy needs informed and involved voters. Vote in the primaries on Sept 17.

fellow Republican Jim Rappaport of Concord, who won the endorsement of the state Republican Convention last April.

All these candidates and others on the ballots, however, are unlikely to attract more than 20 percent of the town's registered voters to the polls.

Town Clerk Marion Douglas is cautiously predicting a little more than 1,000 of the town's 5,168 registered voters will cast ballots on Tuesday. The polls are open from 7 a.m.-8 p.m. at Town Hall, where both precinct one and precinct two vote.

Primaries are being held for Republican, Democratic, Libertarian and Green Party candidates. Registered voters in those parties may only pull ballots for their particular political party. Unenrolled candidates may choose any of the available party's ballots.

Republicans currently outnumber Democrats in Cohasset by a count of 1,236 to 1,098. There are also a smattering of registered voters in the Libertarian, Mass. Green Party, Reform, and Interdependent Third parties. But the majority of voters – a total of 2,816 – have not chosen to join a political party and are unenrolled.

Democrats vying for their party's nomination, along with O'Brien, include: Thomas Birmingham of Chelsea, Robert Reich of Cambridge, and Warren Tolman of Watertown. Millionaire Steve Grossman of Newton dropped out of the race, but his name still appears on the ballot.

Apart from the Rappaport-Healey and Herzfelder-Grabauskas races, there are no other Republican races.

In addition to governor, Democratic races include; a three-way race for lieutenant governor (Christopher Gabrieli of Boston, Lois G. Pines of Newton and John P. Slattery of Peabody); state treasurer (Michael P. Cahill of Beverly, Timothy P. Cahill of Quincy, Stephen J. Murphy of Boston, and James W. Segel of Needham); fourth district councilor (Christopher A. Iannella, Jr., of Boson and Stephen F. Flynn of Hull); register of probate (Patrick W. McDermott of Quincy and Mark H. Tobin of Quincy); and county treasurer (Joseph A. Connolly of Weymouth, Michael J. Joyce of Braintree and Thomas P. Koch of Quincy).

Last call for the donor wall!

COMMENTARY

PATIENCE G. TOWLE AND SHEILA S. EVANS

In July, the Cohasset Mariner printed a list of donors of $1,000 or more to the Cohasset Library Building Fund, Inc. The names of donors of $1,000 or more will be permanently displayed on the Donor Wall of the new Paul Pratt Memorial Library. The names of donors of all gifts will be reported in the Final Report of the Cohasset Building Find.

At the present time it appears that shelving and furniture and then books can be moved in during the first of the year and the Grand Opening of the library will be in February or March.

The article indicated that Sept. 15, 2002, is the cut-off date for new donors to pledge $1,000 or more, although pledge payments may be made in 2002 and 2003. A number of very nice gifts have been made to the Building Fund since May. While gifts to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library are always welcome, a deadline for inclusion of names for the Donor Wall of the new Library is necessary in order to have the Wall completed for the Library opening. New pledges may be made by telephoning Patience Towle at (781) 383-1954 before next Monday.

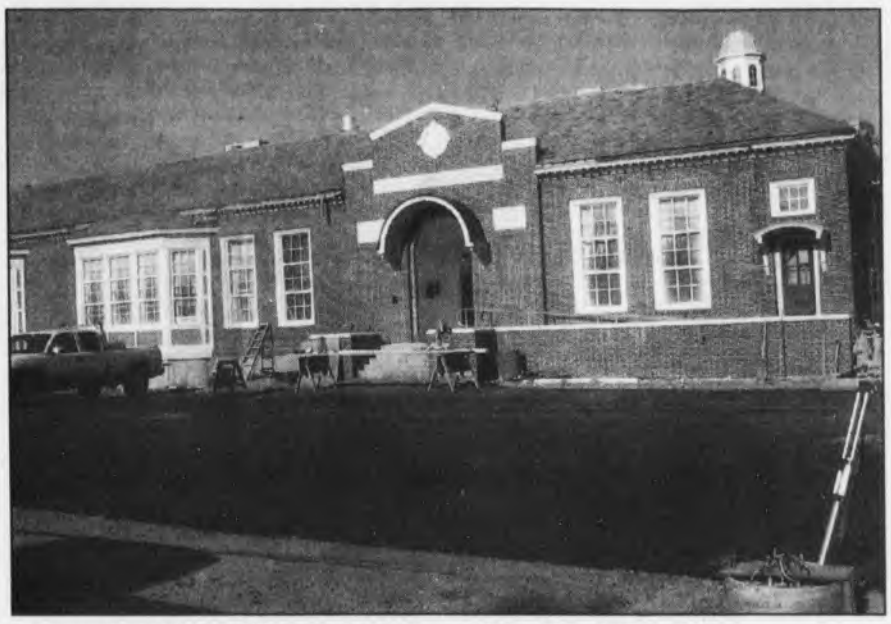
Progress on the new Paul Pratt Memorial Library has been going along pretty much on schedule, as can be seen with each drive past the building. The interior has been plastered, but woodwork, ceilings, painting and more are still to come. Furniture and fabrics have all been selected and are out for bid at this moment. At the present time it appears that shelving and furniture and then books can be moved in during the first of the year and the Grand Opening of the library will be in February or March.

Two much-loved aspects of the hundred-year-old Paul Pratt Memorial Library will move to the new Paul Pratt Library. First, photographic reproductions of the McIvor Reddie murals of the history of Cohasset have been made, thanks to the generosity of the Friends of the Cohasset Library, and will be installed on the interior of the rotunda in the new library. The original murals now in the Rotunda of the present library were given to the Library in 1946 by long-time Librarian, Charlotte Tower. Unfortunately, the existing murals cannot be removed from the plaster to which they are firmly attached, but the reproductions are of excellent quality.

The second artifact making the move is the historic mackerel weathervane which will move from the cupola on South Main Street to the cupola on Ripley Road. William Cavanaro, President of Cohasset Collision Center, has very generously and expertly had the weathervane completely rebuilt for its next 100 years on Cohasset's library.

While Cohasset received its $1.5 million Library Construction Grant early in 2002 because the Town of Acushnet withdrew its plans for a new library, the Massachusetts Legislature has voted a $75 million bond bill for Library Construction Grants and Governor Swift has recently signed it. Since Cohasset was first on the waiting list for these grants, Cohasset's library would have been funded in this fiscal year if Acushnet had not withdrawn. The Trustees had predicted such a course of events at the November, 2001, Town Meeting and are pleased to have the facts corroborate their research.

Library Trustees Patience Towle and Sheila Evans are also president and secretary, respectively, of the library building fund.



Construction of the new library at the old Osgood School is making progress.

What's in a number?

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I guess it was the headlines that caught my eye

"Target drops items over hate symbols," thundered the Globe.

"Target pulls racist caps, shorts," heralded the Herald..

What's this? A true blue American retailer caught selling Nazi swastikas? A top-flight American discount house hustling hoods for the Ku Klux Klan? Is it a T-shirt left over from World War II urging us to "Zap the Japs?"

None of the above.

The "hate symbol" and the "racist" items are caps and shorts with the numbers "88," which as everybody but me knows is a code used by white supremacists and neo-Nazis and stands for "Heil Hitler," the H being the eighth letter of the alphabet.

Apparently they've run out of words so now they're demonizing numbers.

The dastardly plot to assault America with forbidden numbers was exposed by one Joseph Rodriguez, an alert video producer at the University of California at Davis, on a shopping trip to the Target store in Sacramento.

He was looking at a pair of red shorts when he discovered the hateful "88" hiding in mixture with some other less frightening symbols, like skulls and cross bones.

"I just thought they were cool," Rodriquez was quoted as saying by the Southern Poverty Law Center. "But when I saw the 'eighty eight,' I couldn't believe it."

He was so horrified that he took his concerns to the Center in Birmingham, Ala., which put it on its Web site, which is how the Target stores headquarters in Minneapolis learned 88 was a crime. The offending symbol was removed from all 1,100 Target stores nationwide.

"The noxious thing is when these symbols make their way into popular culture and gain wide-spread acceptance in the mainstream," said Mark Potok of the Center.

The number (dare I say it?) 88 apparently has not gained wide acceptance in the mainstream because I never heard of it.

Now that 88 has been declared off limits by the guardians of political correctness, what will the piano-makers do to replace the 88 keys on a standard piano? Will they drop to 87 or increase to 89?

What will lonesome truck drivers, who communicate on CB radios, do now that 88s, which means "love and kisses and sign off" in CB lingo, may soon go the way of 78s in the record industry?

Of course, 88 is not the first number to outrage the easily outraged.

Take 666, for instance. That's the number assigned as early as the first century to the beast who is the agent sent by the Devil to prepare the world for Armageddon. He has been variously identified as several people from the Emperor Nero to Adolph Hitler, including several mothers in law.

Or the number 13, reviled for centuries as unlucky because there were 13 at the Last Supper and one of them turned out to be a rat. It was held in such low esteem that buildings were built without a 13th floor, going from 12 to 14 without explanation.

One day, so the story goes, an English shipbuilder decided to demonstrate to all that an unlucky number was so much baloney. He outfitted a 13-ton ship with a 13-man crew. The ship sailed on the 13th of the month, leaving the dock at precisely 13 minutes past 1 p.m. (1300 by naval reckoning) on a 13-day sail.

It was never heard from again.

HEALTH NOTES

County Sheriff's office and health

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The system is now serving about 250 elders in Norfolk county and has the capability of serving many more.

Last Friday, Cheryl Bambery of the Norfolk County sheriff's office gave a presentation to the Old Goats, a local group of retired citizens, on the "Triad" program, which uses the proceeds of fines and fees to support citizen's initiatives in Norfolk County. The program serves the community by working with various town agencies and the Council on Aging to develop programs which suit local elder's needs.

Ms. Bambery manages the "Are You OK?" project; a system by which elders, after registering with the Sheriff's office, are called at a specific time each day by Sheryl and asked 'Are you OK?,' to which they can respond by saying yes, or by telling her their problems. The system is now serving about 250 elders in Norfolk county and has the capability of serving many more. The program is similar to others offered by health-care groups and senior services most of which charge a monthly fee of about $30. The "Are you OK?" is free to anyone in Norfolk county.

Other Triad projects include free lectures for towns on elder victimization, frauds and scams, abuse prevention and reporting, and a free emergency beacon and flashing light for installation in homes. For information on any of these programs, call 1 866 900-7865 or 781 849-0672..

One of the more useful of the Sheriff's programs consists of a simple refrigerator magnet which contains a form to be filled out by an occupant. The form contains space for name, address, phone, etc, but then goes on to provide for listing of emergency contacts, doctors, medications, etc and much other information which would save vital time for arriving medical assistance, in the event of incapacitation of the occupant. Emergency responders know to look on the refrigerator for a form in a red envelope refrigerator magnet saying "File of Life." I have one on my refrigerator; it's not as attractive as my granddaughter's art, but it's just as useful. A supply of these magnets is available at the Board of Health. Get yours, today.

Gov. candidates get testy as primary looms

STATHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

Recap and analysis of the week in state government ending Sept. 6

Inevitably, the campaign for governor turned more negative last week, as candidates discerned the finality of the Primary Day deadline looming darkly ahead. Only one Democrat can advance in the Sept. 17 primary election, and with a week and half left in a year and a half campaign, everybody's getting – testy.

Bob Ochs of WBUR had to threaten to turn off the microphone last Tuesday (Sept. 3) as the quartet jostled for position, literally and figuratively, in a small studio room during a debate promoted as a "conversation."

With Warren Tolman running negative ads questioning Robert Reich's honesty, Reich seemed disinclined to repeat his assertion, made directly to Tolman, during a debate in a more cordial stretch of the campaign: "I think you'd be terrific."

That day in July, Reich went on to say: " . . . I think I'd be even better." A point he reiterated, only this time with a snarl. Tolman's spending his new Clean Elections money (ironically) on negative ads about Reich's credibility, and polls show it's working. It's sure irritating Reich, anyway.

Further elaboration on the negativity would be re-transmission of the conventional wisdom – the opposite of real journalism. So let's curl a few conventional lips by asking a novel question: what's there to like about these candidates after you've studied them awhile? You might be surprised to learn it's an easy question to answer, and here goes.

Thomas Birmingham: Extremely smart. Funny. Really does play basketball – not just for TV commercials. He is not just claiming to have accomplished a lot as Senate president. When he takes credit for improvements in education, worker's comp, environmental management and worker rights, it's because he deserves it, and no one disputes it.

Shannon O'Brien: Is extremely not full of it, or full of herself. That is, talking to her is like talking to your neighbor – the un-annoying, un-weird one. She comes across as a regular and likable normal human being, who likes sports and her family and people. Also: when she talks about inspiring and creating opportunity for her nieces and daughters, the journalist's B.S. detector stays totally silent. She means it.

Tolman: Absolutely earnest. If he's on a mission, he's locked in – so much so that the jaded are always wondering if he's for real. He is. He has that quality that Bill Clinton is said to have – in a good way – of being really, really with you when he's with you. At the same time, he's easy to be with – low-key and well measured.

So let's curl a few conventional lips by asking a novel question: what's there to like about these candidates after you've studied them awhile?

Reich: even from afar, it's obvious what his strength is. Funny, funny, funny. He's also smart and famously so, but his standout quality is being a gas. Like asking Tolman in a debate, "but enough about me – what do you find admirable about me?" – and doing it non-obnoxiously, as only a person with a great sense of humor would. Or saying at a labor forum, "I want" — then knocking over his water glass, and without missing a beat, finishing up with, "— to spread water all over this table." This kind of thing goes on and on with Reich.

"Positivity" from the press at the apex of a political campaign is sure to curl conventional lips, but citizens soaked in negativity can take heart that there's something to like about these people too.

Pleasant as they all may be as people, with Labor Day past, the candidates got serious about beating one another, and occasionally nasty.

• The debate over who's best to take on Mitt Romney, and then the challenges facing Massachusetts, consumed the week, culminating in a debate last Thursday at Boston University. It may have been the first good look many of the swing voters who'll decide the election had of the Democratic crop. Reich and Tolman extended their dispute over mudslinging and truth telling; Birmingham touted his record; O'Brien aimed for the middle of the electorate and said her opponents have distorted her record on financial management. The major tension of the debate was the other candidates trying to associate O'Brien as closely as possible with House Speaker Thomas Finneran – and Romney doubtless took heed.

• The lone Republican running for governor had a stress-less week in comparison to the Democrats. Mitt Romney had the pleasure of accepting the endorsement of the Massachusetts Chiefs of Police. The chiefs' organization declined to make an endorsement in the lieutenant governor's race, a development that did not go unnoticed by a press watching Kerry Healey struggle with a strong challenge from Jim Rappaport.

• After drawing attention for languishing so long, the bill to prevent and punish terrorism and terror threats sped from the early stages of passage onto the law books in a week – last week. Acting Gov. Swift signed the measure last Thursday after it cleared the House and Senate during informal sessions. The new law sets up specific crimes regarding terrorist threats, possession of dangerous materials, and carrying out hoaxes such as the one that disturbed the North Shore this week after white powder was received in the mail deliveries of 11 police departments

• Opening hearings that could wind up resolving the Medicaid pharmacy impasse, the Division of Health Care Finance and Policy heard veteran lawmakers testify that a cut in reimbursement rates to drugstores that fill Medicaid prescriptions was ill-planned. "It's clear we had no idea what we were doing," said Rep. Daniel Bosley, D-N. Adams. A 12 percent rate cut has the major chains threatening to stop serving Medicaid recipients; they have agreed to hold off and the old reimbursement rates are in place until Oct. 2. The complexity of drug pricing is clearly making it more difficult to say what rate is a fair one.

• The state collected $37 million less in August than it needed to meet budget projections, the Executive Office for Administration and Finance said. Combined with July revenues, which fell short by $4 million, the budget gap stands at $41 million two months into the fiscal year. Acting Gov. Swift has asked state agency managers to prepare a list of spending cuts totaling $200 million. She may implement some or all of those cuts this fall, depending on revenue performance.

• The agency needs to erase a $1.2 million shortfall in its own accounts, so two managers and all 26 "tax examiner one" workers are being let go. DOR spokesman Tim Connolly said he did not expect processing of returns, or the department's ability to collect revenue, to be affected.

• The state will still be able to immunize anyone who wants a flu shot, but spokespeople did ask healthy residents to delay getting their shots by a few weeks this year. Reductions in funding make it necessary for DPH to order 132,000 fewer doses, or 19 percent less this year. Still, DPH says, the department expects to have 560,000 doses available this flu season.

• The high school class of 2003 is the first one that must pass the MCAS exam to graduate – and 81 percent of that class has now cleared the bar, Acting Gov. Swift announced. The pass rate is up from 76 percent last winter. In her annual "state of education" address, Swift said 60 percent of the $50 million devoted to MCAS remediation will be directed toward high schoolers. Education Commissioner David Driscoll said 81 percent is better than he expected after this round of MCAS extra chances.

AvalonBay is confident it can please Cohasset

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

AvalonBay has done a lot of building already, despite the fact that the Virginia-based company is still in the hearing phase of its proposed 200-unit 40B project in Cohasset.

The controversial project has sparked a wave of public reaction, highlighted by the start of a new citizens' group, dubbed Cohasset Action, aimed at dismantling 40B.

For AvalonBay, though, the reaction is expected.

A veteran of more than a decade of 40B development, the company has completed six comprehensive permit developments in Massachusetts and holds three more permits for projects under construction. According to Vice President of Development Scott Dale, who is overseeing the Cohasset project, if the usual pattern holds true, much of the maelstrom over the project will die down when residents learn more about the AvalonBay, the company, and the way it prosecutes the 40B process.

"Typically, through the approval process and the public hearing process most residents' concerns are addressed," said Dale. "We present a lot of information and try and get the accurate facts out there relative to the impacts of each of our communities. Once people really have an understanding of what our communities are about, that allays most people's fears."

Dale was quick to point out, however, that not all people will be convinced.

This is apparent as the Anti-40B group continues with plans to ask Special Town meeting to declare a moratorium on 40B. That moratorium is more symbolic, than substantive, with its intention to raise the issue in the courts and on Beacon Hill. The group is also looking into hiring legal and expert advice to review Avalon's application and find deficiencies.

"I think people are more educated about 40B today than they were 12 months ago and than they were 12 months prior to that," said Dale. "To some degree, I think that the focus on 40B has precipitated some of the response. Part of what we are experiencing is a backlash against 40B and not our project in particular."

Therein lies the quandary: Can 40B, the law, and individual 40B projects be separated? Dale thinks so.

"If it is approached the right way and it is approached the way that AvalonBay consistently approaches 40B projects, there will be a benefit to Cohasset," said Dale. "We are a well-capitalized company committed to managing the asset long-term."

But Michael Wescott of Cohasset Action doesn't trust Avalon.

"AvalonBay is an aggressive organization exploiting a poorly written law to bypass local control," he said.

"Once people really have an understanding of what our communities are about, that allays most people's fears."
— Scott Dale, Vice President of Development

Westcott claims AvalonBay has misrepresented the facts and cites the company's estimate of adding about 30 children to Cohasset schools as an example. Cohasset Action plans a mailing alerting the public that the number of children could be much higher.

But Avalon says the Cohasset project can be geared toward empty-nesters (see related story).

Working together

Dale points to Weymouth AvalonBay project as an example of the company's ability to work with the town.

"In Weymouth (another Avalon Project) there were existing sewer problems," said Dale. "By working with the Town of Weymouth we actually left the sewer system significantly better off after the project was completed."

AvalonBay provided a four-page list of references that range from institutional or non-profit agencies like the Massachusetts Housing Finance Agency to Boston-area municipal and business references.

Also attached is a page of quotes from the towns of Quincy, Wilmington, Peabody and the Massachusetts Housing Finance Authority. Peter Kolsen, the Quincy City Council President at the time of the Grand Opening of Avalon at Faxon Park in 1998, had a comment included that is illustrative of the nature of those quotes:

"Working with Avalon, the word integrity comes up an awful lot," said Kolsen. "We've learned from what they say and negotiating with them, (that) you can trust their word and that is a big factor."

The Town of Wilmington has two AvalonBay projects, both under comprehensive permits.

"We have two 40B projects with AvalonBay with one of them up and running and occupied for a couple of years and the other one may be totally occupied at this point in time," said Duncan, who was reached by telephone. "Our experience has been very positive. The development that has been around for a few years is now a development that the town is very proud of."

But having a project that the town could be proud of was not something that came easily.

When the first Avalon Project was proposed by a different company 10 years ago, the town fought the application through the courts. That company eventually went belly-up and Avalon bought the land and, ostensibly, the permit. But instead of launching into the previous project design, which greatly concerned the town, Avalon sat down with officials and proposed several redesign options. A similar Avalon takeover of a another project the town was unhappy with, led to the second development.

The process was lengthy, but productive, and in the end both sides got what they wanted — Avalon had a productive and economically viable community and the town had a say in the matter.

"I can't pat myself on the back to much for the negotiations," said Duncan. "AvalonBay is very easy to work with and very willing to negotiate."

According to Duncan, that negotiation took place in good faith.

"When we were receiving the second AvalonBay Project, our traffic manger asked to do traffic counts on the original development," said Duncan. "Avalon gave us permission to do that, knowing that there was a possibility of the number being way more. It actually turned out to be less and the same for the amount of school-aged children. That's been our experience."

Avalon also emphasized the accuracy of its impact figures.

"If you look at our track record, you will see our impact numbers have been very accurate," said Dale. "People are always concerned about traffic and people are usually skeptical about the number of traffic numbers we present. We know based on our actual experience that our numbers are very accurate and in many cases overestimate the impact."

Town officials in Peabody (where there is one non-40B project and a new 40B project under AvalonBay jurisdiction) and Brookline (a non 40B project) had positive reviews for the company.

The process begins next Monday with the first ZBA hearing, but Dale is confident that in the end the majority of residents will support his company's efforts.

"We've been through this before," said Dale. "It's not unusual that there would be some level of opposition, but we have been very successful in dealing with that type of opposition that has presented itself in other projects."

Local anti-40B group gets signatures that gets underway at 8:30 p.m., Monday at Town Hall. Members will also be handing out flyers and pledge cards outside the polls on Primary Day, Tuesday.

The group, which has obtained non-profit status and a tax ID number, is trying to raise $5,000 initially to hire legal counsel and pay for educational materials that may include newspaper inserts.

About 10 people attended Monday's Cohasset Action meeting at Town Hall. The mood was upbeat as group members, who are led by Michael Westcott, exchanged ideas and concerns about the proposed 200-unit, first phase of the AvalonBay project. Avalon is planning a total of 254 units in two phases.

Westcott said the group's game plan is about "finding obstacles."

"It is unlikely the ZBA at this point is going to deny the project outright, but will more likely put some number of conditions on the project, which can be appealed at the state level," he said. "Frankly, we need to find as many obstacles as possible."

The potential of the AvalonBay project flooding the schools with more children than they can handle was one of the issues of greatest concern to the group.

Westcott suggested taking the school issue to the next level by to using the "fear factor" through a town-wide mailing to make sure residents are "painfully aware of the impacts of the project."

Although Avalon is predicting about 30 children, Cohasset Action thinks the complex could attract far more. Lexington's Avalon project has 198 units and close to 220 children, who attend Lexington Schools, says member Justine Vanderlugt, who researched the issue.

Barbara Mullin said Cohasset's new schools are designed to cope with 10 new houses a year for the next five years.

"There is no way they can cope with that," she said about the prospect of hundreds of new children moving in.

But William McLaughlin of Avalon said Lexington is a very different project. He explained Lexington sought "family housing" so the project includes a majority of large three- and two-bedroom units and only a few one-bedroom apartments. The Lexington project is also 28 percent affordable (20 percent low income and 8 percent moderate income).

He pointed out the Avalon project in Wilmington that has 204 units only has about 30 kids.

McLaughlin said the town's views with regards to its needs for senior housing would "clearly be on the table" during negotiations and the project could be geared more toward "empty-nesters."

Lives are changed forever

Terrorist attacks force all Americans to reflect, rethink

By Amy Lambiaso
ALAMBIAS@CNC.COM

For the first time in his life, Hanover resident Jon Frattasio introduced himself to the person sitting beside him on an airplane last winter. He would usually keep to himself on a flight — but on this one, he and many other passengers shook hands with their neighbors before take-off.

"In a way we were all saying — 'we're all in this together,'" he said, adding that he walked the aisles of the plane carefully before he sat down, profiling everyone very carefully. "We know who the enemy is, but we're here now, together."

Whether people have joined a health club, spent more time with their families or told a few more people "I love you," the passing year since the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks on the nation has changed everyone. And many people on the South Shore say the changes have been for the better.

"It's given people a greater appreciation for everything — especially for this country," Scituate Town Clerk Barbara Maffucci said.

But more than that, many area residents said living through the tragic experience has increased their awareness of their surroundings. Not only on planes and in large public places, but in their small South Shore hometowns, where they feel the most safe.

"I haven't seen anything different or strange," Frattasio said. "I live my life, I work my jobs — I do what I have to do. But now I'm definitely awake."

Pembroke resident Deborah Reich agreed, and noted that she has also been "on edge" for the past year. With her oldest daughter Andrea a flight attendant for United Airlines, Reich said she still worries every time Andrea goes to work.

"When I fly now I find myself looking around, wondering who else is on the plane with me," Reich said. "Even though you know it's not right, you still can't help it — you have to wonder."

Reich said that although her daughter flies as little as possible since Sept. 11, it hasn't stopped the rest of the family from traveling when they need to. She said she "can't let it get the best of (her)."

And "moving on" is the best medicine most area residents are calling for. Not forgetting what happened, they say, but keeping it all in perspective.

"I don't want to be scared," Marshfield resident Cathy Brennan said, noting her daughter often flies cross-country. "But if we let it change our lives too much then in a way they've 'won.'"

"We all have to go on," Frattasio said. "We can't let them run our lives."

People of the South Shore have chosen to "move on" in many ways — Executive President of Healthtrax Fitness and Wellness Center in Hanover Brian Cassidy said there was a significant increase in the number of visits to the fitness center for the first few months following September. Cassidy said faced with such a life-changing event, he believes people began to re-prioritize their lives.

"When something like this happens…I think people certainly began to live each day to

Scituate family ignites symbol of hope, healing

Debbie Sampson didn't lose anyone in the terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon.

She didn't know anyone on United Flight 93 which crashed into rural southwestern Pennsylvania when the crew and passengers fought back against hijackers hell-bent on completing their mission of destruction.

But since Sept. 11, 2001 Sampson has kept one candle lit in the window of her Scituate home to remember those who lost their lives that awful day, to honor the families of victims who must some how find a way to get on with their lives, and to remind her own family about the hope, courage and strength we all need to heal.

"The candle is to remind me and my sons that there are people out there who haven't gotten back to their lives. It's a reminder that people are still going through that pain."

No strangers to tragedy, the Sampson family suffered a painful loss seven years ago when Debbie's ex-husband, Dan — the father of her two sons Michael and Matthew — was killed by a drunk driver.

Bringing law and order to Afghanistan

Local JAG member leaves family behind to serve

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

US Army Capt. William Ramsey of Hingham stands in front of the Kandahar airport building after his arrival in Afghanistan.

Bill Ramsey rises early in the morning to go for a run and watch the sunrise.

It's a peaceful time, before the sunlight reveals the harsh reality that is Afghanistan.

Ramsey, a Hingham native, is known as Capt. William Ramsey here, a member of the Army's Judge Advocate General Corps attached to 82nd Airborne Division. He is the Task Force Judge Advocate for Task Force Panther, a lawyer who advises on everything from legal assistance for service members to interpreting the Rules of Engagement. He, like so many on the South Shore — particularly those serving in the military — was affected dramatically by the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11.

"Each morning I love watching the sun rise up over the mountains to our east and gradually light up the desert sands below," said Ramsey in an email interview. "It's sobering, however, to see the remnants of the Soviet/Afghan War everywhere. As a result of that conflict, the countryside is covered with landmines and there are pieces of blown apart Soviet MIG Jets and helicopters everywhere. Not far from where I work is an old Al Qaeda training camp."

Such is the role of an American serviceman or servicewoman – duty calls and soldiers respond.

"As soon as we heard this was a terrorist act, I realized this event would have a significant impact on my life," said Ramsey, who was returning from breakfast at a mess hall in Ft. Bragg, N.C. when he heard about the attacks. "At about 1900 that evening the Division Staff Judge Advocate held a meeting of all the officers and told us to ensure all of our bags were packed and ready to go. I had no idea what to expect, but I knew anything was possible given that the 82nd Airborne is the Army's only unit that has the capability of being wheels up, fully deployed 'Anywhere in the World in 18 Hours.'"

Ramsey left behind his family and his girlfriend, both of whom he misses very much. The opportunity to serve as his brother's best man at his upcoming wedding has gone by the wayside as well. Instead, he works as a lawyer in a desert where temperatures soared to 115 degrees when he first arrived and where minefields left over from the Soviet-Afghan War loom with insidious invisibility under every rock and patch of vegetation.

"I miss my girlfriend and family tremendously and I think about them all the time," said Ramsey. "This feeling is common amongst all of us here. Just last week a friend of mine came up to me and handed me a cigar.

its fullest," Cassidy said. "And I think many people put their personal health at the top of the list."

And on the one-year anniversary of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, many say in order to keep their lives in perspective, the country needs to be reminded of the existence of a possible threat. Brennan said not only was it a horrific day in American history, but a real eye-opener for the nation.

"We felt like we were well-insulated until this all happened," she said.

And regardless of someone's direct or indirect connection with the terrorist attacks, Frattasio said people have definitely changed. Whether they're giving an extra hug that might not have been shared last year, or giving a second glance to a stranger in a crowded place — everyone has changed, he said.

"I would hope and think that it's changed everybody's life," Frattasio said. "We need to remember what happened, but we need to move on as well."

Police join forces to work together

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Crime is nothing new to police officers on the South Shore whether they serve in a small town like Cohasset or a city like Weymouth.

And since Sept. 11 the basic mission of local police to "serve and protect" hasn't changed but the pressure and responsibilities are greater.

"Life is quite different," says Hingham Police Capt. Taylor Mills. "We're never going to have the luxury of having our guard down as we did prior to Sept. 11, 2001.

"You never feel like you can take a deep breath without expecting the other shoe to drop."

Just over a year ago, police lexicon didn't include words like Anthrax or phrases such as "weapons of mass destruction." But now those words are on every officer's mind.

But police also know when faced with a major incident — whether terrorist-related; an act of God, such a as tornado; or a plane crash — they can't go it alone.

What 9-11 put into high gear is a regional, mutual-aid organization that stretches across about 40 towns from Westwood to Duxbury, and over to Wrentham on the Rhode Island border through which police can tap the additional resources needed to handle a large-scale emergency.

Hingham Police Chief Steven Carlson, who sits on the executive board of Metro-LEC (Metropolitan Law Enforcement Council), said the group was in the works prior to the World Trade Center disaster.

"We needed to do this anyway," he says. "9-11 moved this forward and made those slow to get on board realize we have to combine our resources.

"Individual departments can't manage significant events for prolonged periods without outside assistance. They may have the leadership and expertise, but they don't have the bodies," Carlson says.

In a show of patriotism, Hingham police officers Sgt. Rusty Corcoran, Officer Bob Ramsey, Det. Robert Mansfield, Officer Corey Farina and Officer David Petitti serve as an honor guard in Hingham's Fourth of July Parade.

Member police departments pay a yearly fee and provide trained officers, who can respond to a crisis situation in another member town. Special uniforms, weaponry and other equipment is covered by the officers' home departments and communities with very small departments can provide administrative time for the council in lieu of officers.

In a crisis situation, a member chief or his designee calls the Wellesley Police Department Communications Center for help in a range of areas from critical negotiation, special weapons and tactics (SWAT), canines, search & rescue, and more. Wellesley police have been trained to receive and process the requests.

Metro-LEC is modeled after the NEMLEC (Northeast Metropolitan Law Enforcement Council) on the North Shore and is an outgrowth of Northstar, a regional mutual-aid organization that was started by Braintree police in the mid-'90s.

Area help is critical because it takes one-to-three days for significant federal resources to arrive, Carlson explains.

"In a crisis situation such as a hostage stand-off, we need the ability and confidence to utilize all the resources that the public believes we have," he says. "Metro-LEC is in response to a changing environment in which it's OK for a police department to say 'we can't do it alone.'"

Also providing support, but more specifically in the fight against terrorism, is S.A.T.U.R.N. that stands for Statewide Anti-Terrorism Unified Response Network, and was developed under the Executive Office of Public Safety. Launched in March, S.A.T.U.R.N. is creating a statewide intelligence and information-sharing network to detect and prevent terrorist threats. It also provides training and workshops. Most area police departments have assigned two officers to S.A.T.U.R.N.

Weymouth Chief Rodney Rumble says chiefs receive constant emails with warnings and updates about potential terrorist activities or threats. He said police today live in a different environment.

"It was always over there, never here," he says. "We were lucky until 9-11-01 and that was a wakeup call for all of us."

Carlson, the Hingham chief, says his department has a special protocol to deal with the mail.

Attack gives birth to 'anniversary reaction'

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

While the country watched in horror as the events of Sept. 11 took place last year, Pembroke native Stephanie Ventura was getting ready to have a baby.

Ventura went into the hospital to be induced on Sept. 12 and the tragedy of the day before was still fresh in everyone's minds.

"I spent six hours in labor and the news was on the whole time," Ventura said. "It was almost like what was happening to me at the time was second in line. When you're pregnant, you're emotional as it is. That day just amplified all that emotion. I was in a lot of pain that day, but the pain didn't end after the baby was born because the news was still on."

Ventura eventually had a happy, healthy baby girl that day.

There were also plenty of other parents who had babies the day of and the day after the disaster. There are people who celebrate wedding anniversaries near that time every year. Some of those people are wondering how those typically happy occasions will ever be the same again.

Scott Pickard, spokesperson for South Shore Hospital in Weymouth, said those women who gave birth last Sept. 11 were going through a lot of mixed feelings.

"It caused a real series of conflicting emotions," Pickard said. "People wanted to be happy about their own wonderful experience, but at the same time, they felt that was somehow inappropriate given the events that played out. They seemed to be feeling a sense of subdued joy."

"The day I had the baby I was happy, but I also felt sad for all the pregnant women who had lost their husbands," Ventura added.

Jacqueline Rose Ventura

Ventura said she is not sure how the events of Sept. 11 will affect her baby daughter's birthday down the road.

"I want her birthday to always be happy, but I also want her to know what happened the day before," Ventura said.

Hingham resident Priscilla T. Keough has a son who's birthday falls on Sept. 11. She said that day, her son was struggling to understand how such a thing had happened.

"Later that night we sang 'Happy Birthday' and my son blew out his candles," Keough stated. "In the days that followed my son asked through tears why such a bad thing happened on his birthday. The one thing we could answer him was that yes something very bad had happened but lots of babies had been born that day too and that was a reason for joy."

Keough's husband, an obstetrician at South Shore Hospital, was on duty the day of the terrorist attacks. He was the one that called her to break the news of those horrible events.

"He called to tell me 'They've hit the Twin Towers and the Pentagon,' " she stated. "A woman was in labor with her first child and the TV set was on in the birthing room...it was one of the most unusual births he had ever attended."

Nate Murray, a psychologist at Mass Bay Counseling in Marshfield, said some people who have birthdays or anniversaries on or around Sept. 11 will be feeling the effects this year. He calls that "anniversary reaction."

"Anniversary reaction will typically occur around the time of the traumatic event," he said. "The first time people experience it, they experience it with significant intensity. In the case of Sept. 11, it seemed like it happened yesterday. The loss is still just as bad and the emptiness is just as deep."

Murray said the anniversary reactions can sometimes be as painful as the tragic event that spawned it. Sometimes it can be even worse.

"Those most closely affected by that day did not seek a lot of help because they didn't see that they needed help," Murray said. "That's a normal response to trauma—in the beginning, we're numb. As time goes on, we begin to feel the effects."

Murray said those who have birthdays, anniversaries or anything else on or around Sept. 11 should not lessen the significance of those events. Murray said he doesn't think that will happen.

"Two clients of ours had children at that time," Murray said of Sept. 11. "And the tragic events did not overshadow that very joyous occasion. If you got married around that time, you'll definitely remember what happened on Sept. 11 but it won't take away anything from the marriage itself. It'll make that day even more important than it already was. The preciousness of marriage and the preciousness of new life is going to be paradoxically even more important and special."

"It caused a real series of conflicting emotions. People wanted to be happy about their own wonderful experience, but at the same time, they felt that was somehow inappropriate given the events that played out. They seemed to be feeling a sense of subdued joy."

Scott Pickard, spokesperson for South Shore Hospital in Weymouth

He added children who have birthdays that day will come to understand the significance of that date in time.

"A child's reaction to that depends on his or her age," he said. "It probably won't event be an issue for them unless they were closely affected by a loved one dying."

Murray said one of the ways people can cope with the first anniversary of Sept. 11 is to open the lines of communication with friends and family.

"One of the things that will be helpful to people on the first anniversary of Sept. 11 would be to talk to other people about it," Murray said. "You could also do something as simple as attending a service or putting a flag out."

Whether birthdays or anniversaries are involved, Murray said from a psychological standpoint, everyone will remember the significance of that day no matter what.

"We'll always associate that event with the things that happened that day," Murray said. "It's interwoven with the fabric of American culture. It's just like how people remember where they were when John F. Kennedy was shot. But in any crisis, and in any tragedy, there are positive things that occur in that people begin to recognize the importance of having a sense of community, having relationships and being tolerant of other people. They realize how precious and fragile our time is here.

"When 9-11 happened, one lesson really came home—each day counts. We don't know if we'll even have a tomorrow."

Light one candle

— it took her back to the early days following Dan's death. She put the candle in her window that day and vowed to keep it lit every day for a year.

"I did it to bring me — to bring us back," Sampson said. "Sept. 11 brought back those feelings all over again." Sampson said she recalled when the "high part" of their personal tragedy was past, there was just grief and a hope for healing left. She knew that would be the reality for thousands of families in the days, weeks and months after the national tragedy.

"The candle is to remind me and my sons that there are people out there who haven't gotten back to their lives," she said. "It's a reminder that people are still going through that pain."

Sampson said she knows well how difficult the first year can be for families when a loved one is suddenly ripped from their lives. The next birthday they would have celebrated, the next family event or milestone is shrouded in sadness.

For Sampson's sons the first Father's Day without their dad was very difficult. And for Sampson, whose own father past away last March, she shared that connection.

"I could connect with those suffering during all those days in the first year," she said. "I was hoping in this household that the candle would remind us that someone else out there may be remembering their dad, or another loved one."

Sampson had planned to take the candle down after the first anniversary of Sept. 11, but her sons, now 19 and 17, urged her to keep it lit at least through Christmas.

In the days immediately following the tragedy the Sampson family did many of the things other local families did. They watched the news. They went to church and to a candlelight vigil at the high school.

And then they did one more thing.

They lit one candle, a symbol of hope, to help illuminate the dark days ahead.

The spiritual voyage from Sept. 11

In the immediate aftermath of Sept. 11, people gathered in their faith communities to seek religious solace, and that remains the case almost a year later.

"I think that across the board, there is still an increase in spirituality in general and church attendance specifically," said the Rev. Daniel Harris, pastor of Holy Nativity Episcopal Church in Weymouth. "It's my sense that's true everywhere."

President Rhonda Swartz of Temple Beth Shalom in Holbrook expressed similar sentiments.

"Sept. 11 changed a lot of people," she said. "After what happened, I think that a lot of people were glad to be among others. I think that continues today."

Like many others, Swartz feels as though she was changed by the unprecedented terrorist attacks on American soil.

"It's hard to explain it, but I feel very different," she said. "My son's going to school in Europe for a year. I'm very nervous because he'll be going outside of the United States, but I don't want to give him my nervousness."

The Rev. Harris, the chaplain of the Weymouth Fire Department, believes that the first anniversary of Sept. 11 is "particularly difficult" for those who actually spent time at what became known as Ground Zero in New York City.

He should know. He was one of them.

"It was very hard to determine the extent of the damage from watching TV coverage," said the Rev. Harris, who arrived at the site of the destruction of the World Trade Center on Sept. 16.

"I think that across the board, there is still an increase in spirituality in general and church attendance specifically. It's my sense that's true everywhere."

The Rev. Daniel Harris, pastor of Holy Nativity Episcopal Church in Weymouth

He was one of a group of 10 members of the Massachusetts Corps of Fire Chaplains invited by the International Association of Firefighters and the New York Fire Department to bring a compassionate presence to the scene of shattered buildings and aching hearts.

"There was a square mile of devastation," the Rev. Harris recalled. "It was a dark place even in the sunlight. Smoke was still billowing from the rubble. A pall hovered over the area. There was a physical feeling of desolation and despair."

The Rev. Harris was assigned to the makeshift morgue housed in two tents on the corner of West Street, right next to Ground Zero. The chaplains worked an eight hour rotation, with two on each shift.

"Our mission was to bring light and hope to a dark place and bring a compassionate presence to hell," the Rev. Harris said. "Our goal was to bring honor and dignity to the remains of everyone found. Everyone at the morgue was aware of our presence."

Although the chaplains found unimaginable tragedy in New York, there was never a thought of leaving before the next rotation arrived.

"All of us who served felt that it was a real privilege to do so," the Rev. Harris said. "It was a privilege to be of service in something as horrific as this."

According to the Rev. Harris, there were two schools of thought about the way the initial anniversary of Sept. 11 should be observed.

"Some felt that there should be large gatherings, while others felt that they wanted to be alone and quiet that day," he said. "For many who were closest to the tragedy, the people at Ground Zero, there was a sense that they wanted to mark the anniversary in a personal, instead of public, way."

Both of these schools of thought were appropriate, the Rev. Harris said.

"Part of the need to do something public was a desire to pay tribute to those who died," he said. "Many people now have a much better understanding of and appreciation for the people who put their lives on the line every day."

How do we move forward in a post-Sept. 11 world?

FAITH REFLECTIONS

By Rev. Ken Read-Brown

There are those who say that their faith in God was shattered by the events of Sept. 11: "What kind of God would permit good people to die in such a way?" or "Where was God on Sept. 11?" Books and articles and television programs have addressed these kinds of questions; but more important than what others think is what each one of us thinks for ourselves.

One can certainly understand that those who have lost someone dear to them, particularly in a sudden or cruel way, may question the religious or philosophical foundations of their lives. At the same time we can't escape the reality that Sept. 11 was hardly the first time that good people have been killed in a senseless or brutal way. Human life and human history are, sadly, filled with the tragedies of accident or natural disaster as well as the unspeakable horrors of hate: the rape and murder of a child... the beating death of a young gay man... the genocidal rage in Rwanda... the Holocaust.

So this means that faith, whether expressed as faith in God or faith in love or faith in humanity, has never been easy to come by. A faith or a philosophy of living that has any staying power has always needed to take into account the realities of suffering and hate and evil. If we feel that our faith has been shattered, maybe it was too easy a faith. If we feel that our philosophy no longer makes sense, maybe it never really did.

If we feel that our faith has been shattered, maybe it was too easy a faith. If we feel that our philosophy no longer makes sense, maybe it never really did.

What then? How do we move forward in what some call the "post-Sept. 11 world"? Maybe it would be worth beginning by recalling that in most essential ways the world actually has not changed. The world is as filled as it ever was with joy as well as suffering, kindness as well as cruelty, beauty as well as ugliness. And it is simply a mystery that it should be so.

I don't know why the world is exactly this way, but it is. Yet, remarkably, we know how to live in this world — or at least how we would like to live.

Moved by what and by whom we love, moved by the beauty of other human beings, moved by the beauties of flower and sea and mountain, we can and we often do act to care for each other and to care for the earth, to speak and act with kindness and compassion, for justice and peace and ecological sustainability — even and sometimes especially in the shadow of all that would negate life and deny love.

We are profoundly related to one another and to all life. Once again, as we humans have done before, we need to act as if we knew it — to answer hate with love, to answer destruction with new creation. It will not be easy. It has never been easy. But how else would we choose to live?

Back, then, to the question of faith. Faith is not the same as a belief that everything will turn out all right if we just behave or believe in a certain way. That kind of faith will be shattered again and again. Rather, enduring faith — which is a faith that includes and transcends all particular religions and philosophies — is manifest in our loving and creative response to whatever life in all its mystery brings. May we move forward faithfully together.

The Rev. Ken Read-Brown is pastor of First Parish in Hingham (Old Ship Church).

Many South Shore residents have turned to their faith in search of answers and hope in the year after the terrorist attacks.

Bringing law and order to Afghanistan

CONTINUED

I said, 'What's this for?' He replied, 'My wife had a baby boy.' "

But like most of the men and women who serve in the Armed Forces, Ramsey loves what he does.

"My friends joke that when they go to work they carry brief cases and their days are spent in court rooms and negotiating sessions," said Ramsey, a self-described "paratrooper/lawyer." "I get paid to jump out of airplanes and carry an M-4 Assault Rifle to work."

It has been quite a transition for Ramsey, who only two years ago was studying law at Suffolk University.

"I guess I'm not your typical lawyer," said Ramsey. "I sometimes think how strange it is that only two years ago I was studying for the Bar exam and now I'm practicing law on the other side of the world in Afghanistan."

It is important to note, however, that he loves the job because he is proud of the job. And he is proud of the job because of it's importance to the world. Few are lucky enough to have such a tangible and productive outlet for dealing with the emotions that Sept. 11 raised across America.

"The day I was notified that I would be the Task Force Judge Advocate, I was pretty excited," said Ramsey. "Being over here is my way of contributing to the fight against terrorism and ensuring that an attack of that magnitude never occurs again."

Ramsey asked that his family's names and addresses not be included in this article under the advice of his superiors. "The enemy we face in this conflict is like no other we've ever faced," said Ramsey. "I would not want to inadvertently put them at any risk."

"Every morning I wake up and if I hear anything about Afghanistan I immediately snap-to," said his mother. "I listen intently and if I feel that it is nowhere near where he is or isn't going to influence him in anyway, I can relax."

His mother describes a void in her life, a void mitigated only by knowing the importance of what Ramsey is doing and the fact that she knows how much he enjoys what he does.

"I worry about him," said his mother. "We miss him terribly. His sister misses him, his brother misses him, we all miss him."

Still, mother and son are quick to point out that his is a relatively safe job during a time of war.

"We were apprehensive about him going, but at the same time we felt he would be safe because of the position he was in," said his mother. "He said to me one time that while he feels that he is doing something very important, it is nothing like those boys that are going out walking beyond the wire. Those are the fellows who are doing the really intense job. Basically they are going out there and risking their lives."

"I miss my girlfriend and family tremendously and I think about them all the time. This feeling is common amongst all of us here. Just last week a friend of mine came up to me and handed me a cigar. I said, 'What's this for?' He replied, 'My wife had a baby boy.' "

— William Ramsey

The "wire" is the extent of the US camp where Ramsey is stationed. The times he has gone "beyond the wire" have given him a small sampling of what the Afghan culture is like.

"The area where I am stationed was the former stronghold of the Taliban/Al Qaeda so their influence is still very noticeable," said Ramsey. "It's not uncommon to see women still wearing burkas or carts being pulled by mules. Every male in this country carries a rifle and the Afghan people live primarily in adobe structures."

Ramsey carries a loaded weapon when he ventures outside the wire, along with a healthy fear of straying from the road and finding a land mine. Again, though, the mission drives him on.

"Those who care about me know that what am I doing over here is important and support me 100 percent," said Ramsey. "The encouragement all of us have received from back home is amazing and we all appreciate it. Being away is at times difficult, but I'm proud to be a part of what we're doing over here and all of us are committed to doing whatever it takes to accomplish our mission."

A year later, so much has changed. The psyche of a nation is still heavily scarred by the loss of innocence. But all can take solace in the comforting words of Capt. Bill Ramsey. There is a mission and there are thousands, many with ties to the area, dead set on accomplishing that mission.

In the Army, there is a word that is used as an as a reply of unity, understanding and dedication to mission. It is all too appropriate here. To Ramsey and all those serving the United States abroad, "Hooah!"

Police join forces to work together

"There's not a day goes by that I don't think about terror," he says.

Hanover Police Chief Paul Hayes says his department is going to conduct a training workshop with a joint-terrorism task force from New York and New Jersey in December that he will open up to other towns.

"Metro-LEC is in response to a changing environment in which it's OK for a police department to say 'we can't do it alone.'"

— Hingham Police Chief Steven Carlson

He said before 9-11, chiefs rarely, if ever talked about terrorism.

"Now it's a focus," he says.

Police officers are more vigilant and more observant to everything around them today than they were before 9-11. For example, when once they might have been curious why a car was parked at a certain location, now they always check it out.

But area chiefs said although increased vigilance and regional mutual aid is now a necessity, the basic job of the "local cop" hasn't changed since 9-11.

"We're still on the front lines," says Chief Hayes of Hanover. "We're still here to serve and protect. That's what we're trained to do.

"Never in my 28 years have I heard a police officer say, 'I'm not going there.'"

As a pastor, the Rev. Harris understood why grieving relatives preferred to stay out of the spotlight.

The Rev. Harris said that he received "invitations from all over, both locally and statewide" to participate in anniversary ceremonies.

"In one way, I was honored by this, but on the other hand, my first thought was that I would rather sit by the ocean by myself," he said.

However, since a key aspect of the anniversary was to honor firefighters, the Rev. Harris agreed to participate in a couple of ceremonies, as well as conduct a quiet prayer service at 5 p.m.

"People now seem to better understand the spirit of self sacrifice," he said.

Memorials honor local lives lost

Three South Shore victims were among the thousands killed in the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

Abington resident Jeffery Coombs, who is remembered by many for his dedication to the community and his love for his wife and three children, was aboard American Airlines Flight 11 en route from Boston to California on business when the plane struck the World Trade Center in New York.

Norwell resident Jay Corcoran, a well respected former youth basketball coach and adoring father, was also aboard that plane.

Kingston native William Hunt, who is remembered by many as a sports fanatic and a loving father, was working on the 84th floor of the second World Trade Center tower when the unthinkable happened — the entire building collapsed.

To keep their memories alive, friends, families, and strangers have set up memorials and scholarships in their names to remember those who were lost.

The Coombs family in Abington said they have been overwhelmed with the support and kindness they have received from the community.

Three days after the anniversary of the Sept. 11, Abington residents along with Christie Coombs and her three children, Matthew, Meaghan, and Julia, will take part in the Jeffrey Coombs Memorial Road Race.

Donna Cherry, the organizer of the memorial race, said the idea behind the event was to bring the community together to remember him and at the same time, do something in the spirit of his kindness. One of the things Jeffery is remembered for was his dedication to the community through his work for American Cancer Society's Relay for Life, Parent Teacher Organization and youth soccer.

"Christie and Jeff always went above and beyond on what an average person does," said Cherry. "They were involved in so many community organizations. This is a way for me to give back and pay it forward to them."

"She called me up and said she wanted to do this," said Coombs. "It's so touching and its a great way to come together on such a sad occasion. The shock of what happened has worn off some what. This is a chance for some relief."

All the proceeds from the event will go toward the Jeffrey Coombs Educational Foundation. The Coombs family set the fund up shortly after his death as a way to remember Jeffrey and to carry on his tradition of helping others in the community. The goal of the fund is to aid children in educational programs.

"The money would help students who need it," said Coombs. "The money will be used in a lot of different ways. A child who needs money to go on a field trip or a family who need financial assistance, the foundation will help in a lot of different ways."

His tragic death also sparked developers of the Meadow Brook project in Abington to name a street after him as a way to memorialize him forever.

"He was so well respected in the community," said developer Richard J. Buccheri. "After hearing about his life and how he died, we wanted to do something."

Dan Olson, of Olson Real Estate who is in charge of marketing the homes, said the idea to name the street after Coombs was a unanimous decision by everyone involved in the project. Olson and Buccheri were propelled in doing so after watching an Oprah Winfrey show that did a profile on Coombs' life.

"Mrs. Coombs thought it was a great idea to memorialize Jeff," said Olson.

"I told the kids about it and they got a big chuckle out of it," said Coombs. "They said he always wanted his way and now he finally has it. The most touching part of it is that we're not full-fledged Abingtonians. We weren't born here or raised here. We just moved here a few years ago. It really makes us feel like we're a part of the community. It's a real honor and several of our friends are trying to buy homes there."

The Corcoran family, like the Coombs family, wanted to something to remember Jay. After his death, Corcoran's wife, Diann, wanted to do something in his memory and in the spirit of his kindness. In the end, she came up with the Jay Corcoran Memorial Scholarship Fund.

The idea behind the scholarship fund is to help send Norwell high school students to college by giving academically inclined students $2,500 each year for four years. The main reason Diann started the scholarship was because Corcoran had a passion for education.

Corcoran was remembered by friends and family as a youth sports coach, supporter of the local drama club and a strong advocate for education.

Kingston residents Diane and Larry Hunt lost their son in the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. He was remembered by family and friends as a beloved son, wonderful brother, loving husband and adoring father. While the grieving is still not over for William's wife Jennifer, she has one thing that will always remind her of her husband, their daughter Emma.

William's younger brother Daniel, along with his fellow students at Bedford High School, raised money to give to his niece a savings bond for the future.

In Norwalk, Conn., where William and his wife lived, the community is in the process of setting up a permanent memorial in his memory.

For the friends and family members who lost loved ones on that fateful day, it will take more than memorials to help them come to terms with their loss and to say goodbye. A lot of the families say the main purpose is to make sure that they will never be forgotten.

Sept. 11, Dec. 7 — bookends on history

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

"It was a beautiful crisp fall day, just like it was on Sept. 11. We climbed as far up the Statue of Liberty as we could. I took some beautiful photos of the World Trade Center. It was a good visit. We had good memories. It is still a lot to comprehend that the twin towers are not there," veteran Stu Chipman recalled about a 1983 visit to New York City.

When two jets slicing into the World Trade Center brought those twin towers crashing down into a smoking pile of debris strewn with broken bodies and broken dreams — when the Pentagon was rammed by a third hijacked airliner — when Flight 91 was brought down in a field in Pennsylvania by heroic passengers and crew sacrificing themselves to stop the terrorists on board — some compared the sudden, deadly assault on America to Pearl Harbor.

The attacks on America on Sept. 11, 2001, and Dec. 7, 1941, had nothing in common.

And everything in common.

The surprise assaults were bookends on 60 years of history.

Both were attacks on American soil: one, an American military installation on Hawaii; the other, on twin towers in New York City, on the Pentagon, and potentially on the White House.

One launched America into a world war; the other is launching America on a surgically-precise war on terrorism cells scattered around the world.

Perhaps both aggressors made the same fatal mistake. The Japanese thought they were dealing America a crushing blow that would prevent the United States from entering the war in Europe. Maybe the terrorists thought they could deal America one blow that would crush the country.

It may take the perspective of time to judge how the strikes, separated by six decades and thousands of miles, compare in impact on the American people and the world.

"I don't think there is any comparison. It was a different situation all together," said Weymouth's Town Clerk Frank Fryer, a World War II marine veteran. "Pearl Harbor was an attack on a government installation. We lost boys, ships, it started a war. Sept. 11 was an attack on buildings. Now we are looking for terrorists. Sept. 11 was a terrible tragedy, but Pearl Harbor was worse. This was also American soil. This was the first attack on the United States. It sent our boys all over the world. Our people never saw anything like that before. Everybody always said, 'It could not happen here.' But it did."

One thing is certain. On Dec. 7, there was no doubt who you were fighting and where you could find them.

"When you saw the planes coming in, they had Japanese insignia everywhere. There was no doubt who was doing it," Fryer said. "In New York on Sept. 11, they didn't know what happened until the second plane crashed. Then they began to think it was terrorists."

Sixty years from today, what will Americans be thinking and doing on Sept. 11?

There is a subtle link between the two events, agree Fryer and Chipman, a Vietnam-era veteran.

"We have not learned our lesson from Pearl Harbor. We let our guard down," Chipman said. "The government had good warning about Dec. 7, similar to how the government had good warning about Sept. 11, that is what we are hearing. Several factors indicated something would happen. In both cases, the government just didn't put all the pieces together."

In both cases the government missed the ball.

"They just didn't get it," Fryer said.

Media coverage of the immediate aftermath of the two attacks was markedly different.

There was no television in 1941, people relied on radio. There were no endless instant replays. In 1941, the country did not realize the impact of Pearl Harbor until the following day, when President Roosevelt declared that the country was at war.

There could have been more attacks on American soil in World War II.

"It could have happened many times over, but our boys were sent overseas to prevent that from happening here," Fryer said.

One of the more visible differences between Pearl Harbor and Sept. 11 is that during World War II, South Weymouth had an active naval air station. Weymouth and neighboring towns centered on a military hub.

With the base closed and nearing redevelopment, an era that began in the days of Pearl Harbor is over forever.

Chipman hopes to be a chronicler of the former South Weymouth base.

"I always had a deep interest in the naval air station. I grew up three houses away from the old main gate on White Street. I got interested in the base early on. All the base comings and goings of the base passed by my door," Chipman said.

In his grammar school days when Chipman went to the Edwin B. Nevin School (now the spot where the Nevin Professional Building stands), his childhood sweetheart was the daughter of the base commander. In 1967, Chipman was drafted, serving in Korea. After the military, Chipman returned to being a neighbor of the still-active Weymouth air base and went into the printing industry.

Then the Department of Defense Base Realignment and Closure Act put the South Weymouth Naval Air Station on the list to be commissioned. Twice, Weymouth's state legislators and congressmen saved the base.

The third and final DoD BRAC list again targeted the air base. This time, in spite of the aggressive efforts of then Commanding Officer Captain Robert A. Duetsch, local citizens, and state and federal legislators and politicians, the naval air station stayed on the closure list on a vote in June, 1995.

In 1995, when the incredible news came that the base was being closed, Chipman started his role as a base historian

"I had a lot of things over the years, but I never saved them. I thought the base always would be there," Chipman said. Since then, he has collected 50 or 60 8X10 photos and a dozen or more 16X20s.

The base is gone now. The memories of the sudden onslaught of war on Dec. 7, 1941, will always remain, now especially stirred up as America enters a more subtle conflict.

"It is much more difficult to track all the individuals responsible for terrorism," Chipman said. "Al-Qaeda is a sparsely settled, much wider network. Many counties have cells. There are less people, but they are spread over a wider area. There is an uneasy feeling here — what's next?"

Sixty years from today, what will Americans be thinking and doing on Sept. 11?

"I'd like to say we won't forget, but it seems like we forget about Pearl," Chipman said.

Until that tragic date just one year ago today brought all the memories crashing back.

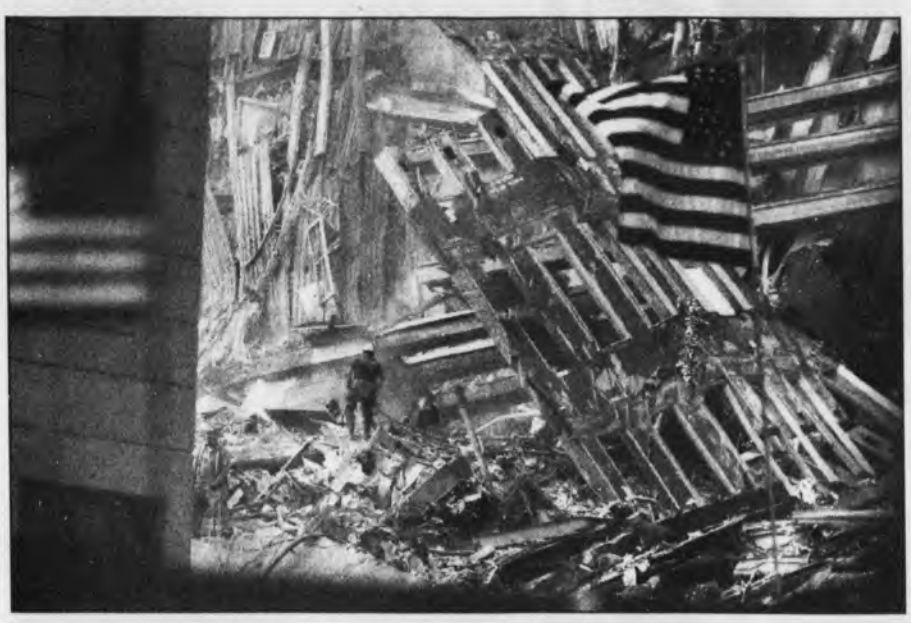
The impact of Sept. 11 reverberated throughout the country and world. Signs of the American spirit where everywhere. Here, a simple flag flying at half-mast at the Scituate Light, expresses our grief.

Approaching Zero

By Greg Hren
SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL

Editor's note: Greg Hren wrote this just a few days after the events of Sept. 11, 2001.



I am a commercial photographer living just south of Boston in a town called Hingham where life always seemed so real.

With regard to the events of Sept. 11 in New York City, I guess we all deal with the stress of a tragedy in different ways.

Since that morning, I have seen all sorts of coping methods. There were kids walking with candles, flags flying on the fronts of homes, banners draped over highway overpasses, and truck windows painted with red, white, and blue colors. All of this seemed so serious, and yet, it hadn't hit me.

There was all the television coverage, yet this horrible event seemed terribly surreal. I heard talk of Pearl Harbor and comparisons to the Titanic and mumbles of Vietnam. "Vietnam" — I knew these words. That was a country. It was also a war. I had seen the PBS; I knew what it was. That was history! These words were part of my vernacular. I had learned these things in school and been indoctrinated by the History Channel.

But now the word "war" was closer. It didn't seem to make as much sense. There were bomb threats here, in my community. People warned me of fuel shortages to come, and the National Guard Armory behind my house was put on alert, and yet it did not feel real.

So what was real? The television said the nation was on the "eve of war." We couldn't go to war? I didn't get it yet.

I thought long and hard, and came up with a plan. If I was to "get it," I was going to have to go and see for myself. See what had started it all. I had to see what our President had seen — the thing that he was going to base all his future decisions on. And to do this, I had to go to Manhattan.

As a photographer, I knew that what I could do for the country was to document what had happened. It was under these pretenses that I began my experience in New York.

Saturday morning I woke up at 6 a.m., departing an hour later. Into my truck I jumped and onto the highway I sped. There was no traffic, and I guess no police were around, because I made the 250-mile trip in less than three hours.

I must have been too focused on counting the miles to think, but where I was going slammed into me as I rounded a corner on 95 just north of the city and was confronted with everything.

There it was. The Manhattan skyline. It was almost too much to take. The television pictures of this place had been haunting my living room for the past four days. It did not now seem possible that I was here, entering this place. That is when I began to get scared.

I made my way to the F.D.R. parkway, where I was immediately confronted with several armies of "Humvee"s in convoy and a huge military helicopter overhead. Police cars with their lights flashing dotted the side of the highway.

Entering the city above Canal Street, I began to make my way south toward the former site of the World Trade Center. It was a strange feeling. Once in the city, it seemed like any ordinary Saturday. There was traffic and people milling about as if they had no idea there were military vehicles circling their homes.

I decided to ditch the car and parked it a couple of blocks north of Canal Street. The atmosphere quickly changed as I walked south and came upon my first checkpoint. I crossed the street and was passed by a flatbed truck carrying two twisted, burned, and mangled New York City fire vehicles. It was starting to seem real, I thought.

I was directed to police headquarters, where I was issued my press credentials. This, a seemingly easy task, took five hours, because the police were unprepared for the media onslaught.

I spent most of my Saturday in line with a large selection of the press corps. This was ironic, as it was the filter of the television that I was trying to escape, and here I was spending my day with Montel Williams.

I had passed the day in line behind a veteran photojournalist, and once issued my pass, I decided to follow his advice to head straight for "Ground Zero."

I began to get a bit scared once we slipped past the first Army checkpoint.

"Don't look back when someone calls, don't look the soldiers in the eyes, and keep moving," the photojournalist told me. "Keep your credentials in your shirt and act like a tourist. We will be all right."

I guess this was my disaster baptism.

Not two blocks into the restricted perimeter, we began to hear screaming. I looked up, and around a corner came several police officers and soldiers running at us. They screamed for us to "get the hell out of" there. One of the buildings was about to collapse and I had no idea what to do. Was this real?

The photographer I was with did not seem alarmed. My heart was pounding out of my chest, but he did not panic. It did not seem very real to him. But people were screaming. And people were running. This had elements of being real.

Several days earlier in a situation just like this, hundreds were killed in quite the same scenario. But that was on television, I thought.

We found out which building to watch, and we quietly hid behind a corner. My guide began to take pictures, so I did the same.

When the "all clear" was given, we got up. Apparently a pigeon had flown into one of the building's sensors and set the panic in motion.

The closer we got, the more the dust became apparent. We passed a sign that read, "Keep your mask on at all times." We looked at each other and dug the face masks out that each of us had brought.

The masks did little to keep out the smell, which began to get intense. It was the smell of burned plastic, the sort that lingers in the back of your nose. And it wasn't just your nose that became bothered. The wind began to blow and fine bits of concrete dust were whisked up into your eyes, causing them to water.

There was debris everywhere — papers and dust were all around. Car windows were covered and storefronts clouded. People had begun to write messages on the dirty glass — "God bless America" and "United we stand."

We were close. The bull on Wall Street had been decorated with flags as if to defy its surroundings, and it did.

Two more corners, two more checkpoints, and there it was. We came upon the last barrier. A soldier stood guard, allowing semi-trucks with dump beds through one by one. Each truck attempting to get in was only allowed access when a full one exited. I stood against a police barrier in awe. I could not believe what I was looking at.

From my vantage point, I could just see a corner of one of the towers. Below, men were climbing on the rubble pile with torches. The area was flooded with emergency personnel and vehicles. Heavy equipment moved continuously as if part of an enormous ballet.

A man came up to me and pointed to a giant piece of a building, yelling over the machinery, "See that, looks like the side of the building. Get up closer and you can read the inside, '74th floor.' It fell from the other tower and impaled the ground!" That couldn't be real? That doesn't happen in real life, I thought.

All around there were donated supplies. Medicine, Gatorade, sandwiches, socks, hard-hats, masks, gloves, anything you could think of. All items were sent by people wanting to help and distributed by volunteers.

I was close, but I was not close enough. There was still one barrier between "Ground Zero" and myself. My veteran friend did not want to go any further. Maybe it had to do with our 20-year age and wisdom difference, or maybe he had waited too long for his credentials and knew getting caught meant having his pass confiscated and possibly an arrest.

I had come too far, and was now too close, not to push forward. Under the barrier and around the corner I went. Just one short block and I arrived in hell. Debris was everywhere and the landscape was unrecognizable. What once were streets were now strewn with hunks of destruction.

The rain had mixed with the concrete dust and spawned a gray muck that stuck to everything. Fire trucks and ambulances were tossed aside, burned, and twisted. Huge cranes muscled steel beams from piles of rubble and tossed them into trucks only to be dumped again.

Hundreds of firefighters standing arm to arm passed buckets of debris from the center of the disaster through small paths that snaked their way along the wreckage to meet front-loaders. Those in turn placed the mess into trucks headed for the barges to the south.

I could finally see it. That day, I was at the center of the world. It was as if I could feel all the eyes of the country, and beyond them, the rest of the world looking over my shoulder at this indescribable horror.

When I lived in Los Angeles, I worked on motion pictures. It has been said before, but what was in front of me was "just like the movies." It was as if a set dresser had been working all week to complete the finishing touches. One could almost picture our superhero swooping in and tossing some huge chunk of iron off the chest of some beautiful woman. Nothing made any sense.

Still-hot steam wept from between masses of iron, giving the quiet pile movement and life. The total scale of the tragedy could only truly be noticed when one looked across the expanse of rubble to see a lone iron worker standing as if an ant atop the pile with his torch, cutting the steel beams into palatable sizes for the Goliath cranes.

It was only then that the enormity of the event gave rise to the unmasking of reality for me.

This was real! I was there. I could see it, hear it, and taste it. It was not a movie!

In the end, the most overwhelming part of my experience at "Ground Zero" was not the wasteland, nor the enormity of the wreckage, nor the scope of the disaster, but the sheer presence of the men and women involved in the rescue effort. This is especially true of the firefighters and their tireless work at a seemingly impossible and fruitless task.

That day I wasn't sure what I was supposed to do, so I did what I knew how to do best — made photographs.

Golf team eyes uphill rebuilding in stacked SSL

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

This fall, the Cohasset varsity golf team will be playing in one of the most talented leagues in the state.

Now factor in that the CHS golfers lost their number one player to the football team. On top of that, the team will be forced to start multiple inexperienced players due to the havoc wreaked by graduation.

This may not be the most uplifting way to begin a season, yet ever-optimisitic coach Torin Sweeney remains convinced that his squad will stay competitive enough for playoff golf.

Norwell has dominated the league in recent years, riding on the shoulders of the Spitz brothers. However, 2001 realignment moved punching bag Hanover up to the Patriot League and imported Cape Cod towns Mashpee and Harwich, two cape towns where golf is king. Both the Falcons and Ruff Ryders beat the Norwell teams last season, though the Clippers did manage to edge them both in the home return match as Scituate Country Club to capture a share of the SSL crown.

With those teams in the league, it left the still talented programs from Cohasset, Abington, Carver and Norton little to no chance to win the league for at least a few years.

"As inexperienced as we are, and with the strength of the league being what it is, a .500 record would be respectable," noted the veteran Skipper coach, who has coached wrestling, football and girls lacrosse in his CHS tenure.

Starting at number one for the Skippers will be senior Greg O'Brien, the captain of the team. O'Brien is a third year starter who has put the most work into his game in the off season, and truly deserves the top spot.

"Greg has taken six strokes off his game," reported Sweeney, of his captain's score of 41 in their latest practice. "I have been very impressed with him."

Although the line-up is only based on the few practice rounds the Skippers have had, the two and three on the team will be senior Pat Reardon and Mike Hajjar, not necessarily in that order. Both gained varsity experience last year as lettermen, and will be looked to for much needed support against very deep teams.

The way it looked to Sweeney at the time of this writing, a trio

Norwell boys shocked by rebuilding Skippers, 2-1

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

A scintillating solo effort by Cohasset's Dave Santiago midway through the second half of Tuesday's showdown with Norwell broke a 1-1 deadlock, lifting the Cohasset boys soccer team to a stunning 2-1 win.

The Cohasset and Norwell boys soccer teams have waged some truly memorable battles over the last two years, and they were battles in most senses of the word: five grueling and physical matches, all decided by one goal, including one in the 2000 semifinals of the South Sectionals.

But this was the year that was supposed to change. Norwell returned 8 of its 11 starters, while Cohasset was decimated by graduation and one killer transfer.

In short, if betting were allowed, everyone and his brother would have put their money on Norwell in Tuesday's South Shore League opener for both teams, and everyone and his brother would be a few dol-

Vikings pillaged in opener

Cohasset field hockey starts on right foot

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

If the field hockey team's first game this past Tuesday was any sort of indication of the season ahead, Lady Skipper fans should be in for quite an enjoyable ride. Cohasset led the whole way over non-league opponent East Bridgewater, winning 2-1 at Alumni Field.

"The kids really worked hard," noted veteran coach Deb Bostwick. "They concentrated on what they had worked on in the preseason."

The Lady Skippers seemed to be more fired up than usual for this contest. That this was the season opener, of course, played a part. But there was also the history: the Lady Skippers tied E.B. last year, 1-1, in a game that, had they won, would have sent them to the State tournament.

It took only eight minutes and change for the Skipper attack to wear down East Bridgewater's defense with relentless shots on net. Junior Courtney Caron, who has earned a starting spot on the front line, redirected a crossing shot by junior middie Kelly Hurley to the weak-side post for the games first tally.

Cohasset then held off the tenacious attack of the East Bridgewater wingers to go to the locker room with a 1-0 lead. Junior Caitlin Condon, starting as the varsity goalie for the first time in her career, made some key saves to hold the shutout for the first half. Condon ended the game with an admirable total of seven saves on eight shots.

Just 3:32 in to the second half, senior captain Sarah Dennis rifled a free hit towards the E.B. goal into a crowd of opposing defenders and Cohasset forwards. Junior midfielder Danielle Pinkus managed to get a stick on the shot and sneak it into the left corner of the goal.

Trailing 2-0, the East Bridgewater team refused to die without a fight. The Lady Vikings stormed right back for a fast flurry in front of the Cohasset goal. However, the defensive line of juniors Megan Marr, Kelly Hurley and Jessie Guild were tremendous in keeping the shots on net down.

With under five minutes remaining in the game, EB's quick wingers managed to creep in behind the defense and score on a breakaway, but that proved too little too late, as they could not mount a second surging attack for the tie.

"Winning over a team like that was a great accomplish-

Sailing takes Flynn away

Cohasset teen wins gold at world sailing championships

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Too bad they don't give odds on who will have the best back-to-school "what I did this summer" essay. All of the smart money this fall at B.C. High would most definitely have been on sophomore Andrew Flynn.

Flynn started sailing at the age of eight in the pursuit of nothing more than fun. Over the next few years, not surprisingly, the allure of competition began to sneak in to that equation. It's only been in the last few years that the Cohasset teen, now 15, has begun to think sailing might actually "take him a few places." In his wildest dreams, however, Flynn conceded he never envisioned anything on a scale with what he did on his most recent summer vacation: winning a gold medal in the International Junior Olympic 420 sailing championships in Portugal.

"Yeah, I never really thought I'd get a chance to do something that big," said Flynn with a shy chuckle. "It was a pretty incredible experience, and then winning (the gold medal) made it all the more special."

The gold medal was actually won in the Silver Fleet, the second strata of sail teams in the 83 team world competition that saw 18 countries represented in Tavira, Portugal from July 8-20.

Flynn and "Skipper" Dave Siegal, of South Dartmouth, were actually the final team eliminated after four days of qualifying races from the field of 41 for the Gold Fleet. Neither of the young men hung their heads, however, as they went on to prove they were indeed the best of the rest.

"It was a little disappointing that we just missed making the Gold Fleet, but we had some real good competition in the Silver Fleet too," noted Flynn, who won the Southern Massachusetts Optimist Sailing Championship last summer as a solo act.

Flynn knew little about team sailing, and even less about the 420 World championships when Siegal rang him up this past winter asking him to "crew" for him in the 2-man

Offense shines, but questions remain on defense for gridders

With his team not opening until Saturday, Tony Rolfe has one day more than most of our area football coaches to prepare. From the sound of things, the Cohasset High head coach will be looking to maximize each and every one of those additional minutes.

"We've still got a few things to iron out," noted Rolfe the day after his Skippers scrimmaged Cape Cod Tech to mixed results. "I thought we did some things well, and some other things not quite so well. That extra day to prepare is probably a good thing."

The fifth year head coach noted that "some tweaking" was needed in just about all areas for his South Shore League defending champion Skippers, though he honed in predominantly on the defensive line and backfield in his post-game critiquings.

"We're going to be spending a lot of time in practice in those areas this week," Rolfe conceded.

One area Rolfe and his coaches were reassured on Friday probably did not need a whole lot of "tweaking" was the offensive "skill" play. Quarterback Mike Snowdale and backs Ted Straughn and Braun Goodson made the most of what their line

Who says soccer isn't a contact sport? Scituate and Cohasset player jostle for position in Thursday's showdown won by Scituate, 1-0.

Lady booters fall to 0-2

The Cohasset girls soccer team has surrendered two goals this season, but that's been enough to cost them two decisions.

The Lady Skippers will be looking for their first goal of the season, as well as their first win, when they travel to Mashpee this afternoon for their second South Shore League match of the fall (4 p.m. start).

Coach Deb Beal's girls played unbeaten Scituate (3-0) as tough as anyone has to date this season, but a goal by Lady Sailors star Lauren Glancy at the 20 minute mark of the first half turned out to be all the offense either side would muster.

In Tuesday's South Shore League opener for the Lady Skippers, Norwell captain Minnie Doherty netted the game's lone goal in the first half, and goalie Sarah Cox thwarted all Cohasset salvos, sending the locals to their second consecutive 1-0 defeat.

lars lighter today.

You got the sense last week, though, that Norwell coach Jack Browne would have wanted no part of that action. Indeed, the words he spoke on the subject of Tuesday's game proved prophetic: "You throw out all the assumptions when Norwell and Cohasset play."

It appeared early on this game would go according to assumptions, as gifted Norwell striker Garrett Bates put the host Clippers out in front just 2:33 in, as he took a through pass from Ryan Henry, beat Cohasset sweeper John Oronte and then slipped the ball past Cohasset keeper Curt Kahn.

The Skippers responded with a lot of the fight that was no doubt left over from last year's meetings, and it was junior Chris Clark who benefited from this renewed passion when he collected a pass from captain Robert Hickey just five minutes later and drilled a shot past powerless Norwell keeper Mike Allen from 15-yards out just inside the left post, making it a 1-1 game.

To no surprise, the Clippers rallied to control the tempo and territorial struggle throughout most of the remainder of the first half, but they could not push one past the surprisingly sharp Kahn, a junior starting his first varsity game in net after playing the last few years as a midfielder.

Norwell's best chance of the half came near the 12 minute mark when a defensive mix up allowed a clean break-in on Kahn, but the rushing goalkeeper forced a quick shot that caromed wide off the right post.

The Cohasset backline of Hickey (fullback), Craig Laugelle (fullback), Conor Buick (stopper) and Oronte seemed to settle down after that, though, to contain Norwell's explosive front six, headlined by returning league all-stars Bates and Jason Grier as twin strikers.

"We had a few breakdowns defensively in the first half, but our guys (on defense) really pulled it together after that and played a great game," lauded Cohasset coach Dave Nigro,. "We bent a few times, but we didn't break. They did a good job on some talented Norwell players."

Still, Kahn (11 legitimate saves in the 20+ shots he faced) was called on several more times in the game, answering the challenge each time. The junior even stoned returning league scoring champ Grier on a clean break-in early in the second half.

Grier's tough luck continued, as he rang a shot off the crossbar early in the second half, with Norwell continuing to dominate the territorial war. Norwell also had a handful of shots sail just wide over the course of the second half.

"It seemed like Cohasset only broke it out of their end a handful of times in the second half, but just one of those times proved to be enough," noted Norwell's coach Browne glumly.

At the 20 minute mark, Santiago took a long clearing pass near midfield to find himself one-on-one with the Norwell sweeper. The Cohasset junior striker went wide and maintained an angle on net, forcing Norwell's Allen out of the crease to cut down the angle, at which point Santiago cooly popped it over his head and into the open net.

With the lead in hand, Nigro moved midfielder Jesse Brewer back to the defensive end, which helped thwart the Norwell attackers, who struggled valiantly down the stretch to net the equalizer.

"I'm thrilled with the effort our guys gave tonight," summed up Nigro. "(Norwell) had more chances, but we did a nice job of taking advantage of our opportunities and we had a goalie who came up big. That was the difference."

Browne knew going in to the season his team would have its hands full in the first two games, but conceded his disappointment following Tuesday's loss that the Clippers didn't come away with at least one win.

The 3-2 loss in last Thursday's opener to Hingham, the number 8 ranked team in Massachusetts by the Boston Globe, presented a similar storyline to Tuesday's heartbreaker.

The Clippers maintained a territorial advantage throughout much of the contest, but simply could not finish on numerous golden opportunities. Juniors Bates and Rob Beach tallied for Norwell, each time answering a Hingham goal, but the host Harbormen put the game away with just 12 minutes remaining off of a scrum in front that featured several failed clearing opportunities by Norwell defenders.

"There are a few things we could be doing better right now," offered Browne. "We need to defend a little better in some areas, we need to work both sides of the field more, but the big thing is we need to finish our chances to score."

The second year Norwell coach admitted he was at something of a loss to explain why his team, which returned all six starters at forward and midfield and led the South Shore League in scoring last year, has struggled at the offensive end in the first two games.

"I still think we'll be OK in the long run," concluded the coach. "Hopefully, we'll just snap out of this, and then go on the type of tear I think we can. It's a long season. We have plenty of games to go, and we'll see Cohasset again. That's a good thing."

At least that's the way he's trying to get his team to think.

"I told the guys to remember how they felt right now," said Browne, sharing the final message he delivered to his troops following Tuesday's loss. "They've got to use this as a motivational tool, to get them to work a little harder in practice and dig down a little deeper in games."

ment," said senior captain Heather Peraino, who moved from center halfback to left forward. "They were very aggressive trying to beat us to the ball. The last five minutes were really intense, and we knew we had to make a stand."

Possibly the most exciting thing about this win was that Cohasset could outduel a team such as East Bridgewater while playing with what only slightly resembles the normal line-up. Five of the team's twelve seniors were serving as peer counselors at the CHS version of freshman orientation at Camp Marist in Ossippee, New Hampshire.

This Thursday the team should have the full line-up back. Starting goalie captain Sera Genovese, starting middies Rachel Smith and Sarah Brady and starting fullbacks Holly Dinsmore and Kimmy Ulmer should solidify a team with loads of varsity experience.

It is a good thing the whole team will be playing today because the Lady Skippers will match up with the Hanover Indians, the team that kept Cohasset from earning the South Shore League title in 2000. Although Hanover has brought its athletics to the Patriot League, the field hockey rivalry remains as heated as any that can be found in the current SSL.

Though Bostwick was not completely satisfied with every aspect of the team's opening effort, overall, she was quite pleased with the season's outlook.

"They know they made a few mistakes, but they were correctable mistakes," observed Bostwick. "But I was very impressed with the team unity. Everyone relied on everyone else."

national 420 Junior Olympics sailing championships in San Diego in June. Nevertheless, Flynn agreed. Siegal, 19, applied for entry, banking heavily on the stellar individual records of both Flynn and himself, and they were accepted.

Serving as the one man "crew", Flynn was responsible for manning both the spinnaker and jib (the two smaller sails), while the Skipper was in control of the main sail. It was also Flynn's job to advise the Skipper on the whereabouts of chasing boats and basically to just act as a second set of eyes. Of course, knowing what to look for with those eyes and pass along was the key.

"I'd never crewed before, but I learned pretty quickly," noted Flynn, also a standout with the B.C. High Sail team, which finished seventh in the New England championships last year. "There's no doubt the experience made me a better sailor."

Siegal and Flynn finished fifth in the elite national field at the San Diego venue to qualify for the International Championships. Also qualifying were four other male teams, with all eight of those sailors haling from San Diego, and a female team.

It probably should not come as a surprise to learn that Flynn seemed more eager to talk about his experiences themselves than the actual races, which lasted approximately a half hour each.

"The whole competition had an Olympic feel to it," reported Flynn, who is helped to stay in shape for sailing by wrestling with the B.C. High team in the winter. "Everything about the experience was really great, except the food. I wasn't too crazy about that."

Indeed, the small seaside community of Tavira quickly came to resemble a small scale Olympic Village, as athletes from most of the 18 countries hung their nation's flags over their balconies.

Despite the high stakes and national pride on the line, Flynn said there was also quite a bit of camaraderie between the sailors, though he did note there were a few exceptions. Flynn and Siegal became quite chummy with their fellow American sailors, and the Americans also got on famously, not surprisingly, with the Australian teams.

Relationships between the Americans and sailors representing other nations were aided in that most of the foreigners seemed to speak at least some English. Flynn collected several email addresses, and looks forward to keeping in touch with his new friends from the international sailing set.

Of course, he's hoping to renew a lot of these acquaintances face-to-face next summer, as he and Siegal are currently intending to compete at next year's national championships, with an eye towards the 2003 International's in England.

"To be able to do something like this again would be incredible," said Flynn. "This was definitely the most unbelievable experience I've ever had."

Cohasset QB Mike Snowdale did a nice job of directing the offense in the pre-season finale Friday.

Countdown is on

gave them on Friday, as these three led the charge on a couple of impressive drives against CCT's top defensive unit.

Given time to look downfield, Snowdale, a proven big time chucker, was able to keep all three of his proven big time receivers — tight end Tom Anderson and wideouts John Durkin and Chris Bilodeau, all returning starters – involved in the game plan.

Goodson — a 210-pound senior who moves from fullback to halfback this season, filling the huge shoes of 1,400-yard rusher Jason Brown — was particularly impressive, according to the coach.

"Braun isn't quite the same kind of back as Jason, but he looks really strong," noted Rolfe. "He runs through a few more people that Jason could run around, but he's faster than people think too."

It sounds like the most pleasant surprise for the coach since camp opened on Aug. 19, though, has been the steady improvement on the offensive line, which features only two returning starters: senior Cosimo Cambi and junior Stephen Davis.

In terms of individual surprises, two of Rolfe's more pleasant ones have been provided by the play of 6-foot-2, 245-pound freshman Nick Arment and left tackle Dan Tarpey.

"I'd say Dan is our most improved player overall so far," lauded the Cohasset coach of the 6-foot-2, 170 pound junior, a seldom used reserve tight end last year.

As for his assessment of Arment, Rolfe started by confessing he generally preferred not to use underclassmen on the line, but then noted: "He just keeps getting better and no one has taken the job away from him. Nick has really learned the things we've asked of him quickly, and he's doing some other things instinctively that are real encouraging."

The situation at center is similar, where sophomore Matt Casey quickly established himself as the frontrunner for the starting nod, and has done nothing but cement that claim over the last few weeks.

"We were really looking at that offensive line in (Friday's) scrimmage," said Rolfe. "But I think we've pretty well settled on what we're going to do now. The guys we have there now have solidified themselves."

Captain Ben Lynner, who's missed the last week due to an injury and will sit out the opener, will likely figure in this mix once he returns.

It is on the defensive line, though, where the absence of the 6-foot, 210-pound returning league all-star is really being felt. This was obvious in Friday's exhibition, as an alarming number of Cape Cod runs reached the secondary.

Rolfe notes there are several candidates still vying for playing time up front, saying the only player who has distinguished himself from this group to date has been 6-foot-4, 220-pound junior defensive end Sean Connolly.

While play at linebacker has been relatively solid, the coach reports, the situation in the defensive backfield is quite similar to that up front. In other words: there are still many questions.

"It seems like we've got a lot of guys on defense who play well on one play, but then not on the next," sums up Rolfe. "Part of that is that we have new people who aren't acclimated to the position or to one another. That takes time. We just have to figure out how to move that process along as quickly as we can in this last week."

Surrounded by hazards

of sophomores will round out the remaining three starting spots. Colin McGruder, Danny Allen and Jack Carroll all have played solid practice rounds and should continue to improve throughout the season.

"I have been happy with my sophomores," said Sweeney. "They all played a lot in the off season, and they will be a little less nervous with some competition under their belts."

Finishing out the top eight, seniors Ross Lieb-Lappen and Ian Kidder will be vital to the team's success filling in roles off the "bench."

Playing two against Harwich, Mashpee, and Norwell will make it very difficult for the team to make it to the state tourney for a second straight year. It makes every other match that much more important, starting this Thursday against Abington. Cohasset also scheduled two non-league matches against Sacred Heart of Kingston, a team the Skippers have played on a par with the past few years.

IT'S HAPPENING

Roaring 20s party benefits museum

A Roaring 20s Garden Party and Antique Car Parade will be held Sept. 22 from 3 to 7 p.m. Lions Gate, the Cohasset estate of Diane and Robert Johnston.

The event will benefit Our World, the children's global discovery museum that will soon be under construction in a two-story wing of the former Joseph Osgood School. The hands-on museum and a related global-themed playpark are set to open in the fall of 2003.

Lions Gate, the site of the garden party, is a four-story American Gothic mansion built in 1904 for shoe magnate Thomas Gustave Plant and his wife, Carolyn.

Plant later built "Castle in the Clouds," a sister house to Lions Gate, in New Hampshire. A frequent guest there was Teddy Roosevelt.

Carolyn Plant remained at the Cohasset house, which she surrounded with beautiful gardens. Those gardens have been restored, along with the house itself.

Period dress (1900-1920s) is encouraged for this event, but optional. After a parade through town, the antique cars will be parked around the estate's circular drive. Violin soloist Eugene Kaplan will entertain and works by well-known portrait artist Peter Quidley will be on exhibit. Refreshments will be served.

The cost for the benefit is $150 per ticket, much of which is tax deductible. For further information, call 781-383-3198. Reservations by check or credit card can be sent to Our World, P.O. Box 422, Cohasset, 02025.

Farmers market having great year

The Cohasset Farmers Market, which is held from 2:30-6:30 p.m. every Thursday until Oct. 17, is having another successful year. Boston Magazine voted it again the "Best Farmer's Market" two years in a row.

The market is run by a small group of people that work very hard all year to guarantee success.

The market also appreciates any donations people can give to the organization. Hot dogs are sold each week to pay for the entertainment that is provided.

On Sept. 26, the market is having a second dog show costume parade at 4 p.m. so get your dogs ready. Georgette Stamoulis from Heads and Tails is running the event.

On. Oct. 3, a cooking demonstration will be held by Bernard's Restaurant with vegetables from the local farm stands.

Oct. 17, will be the last farm stand of the year. Michael Bleakie will be giving rides on his vintage fire truck along with many other events.

Brass concert at St. Stephen's

As part of its Sunday Concert Series now in its 12th year, St. Stephen's Church in Cohasset is presenting the Huntington Brass Quintet in concert on Sunday, Sept., 22, at 3 p.m.

The Huntington Brass, founded in 1997 at Boston's New England Conservatory by Bron Wright, trombonist, is a group in residence at St. Stephen's, and its players include Mark Emery and Tom Cupples; trumpet, David Ohanian; horn, Bron Wright; trombone, and Randall Montgomery, tuba.

Founder Wright frequently performs with the Boston Pops and many of the orchestras in and around Boston, and is a soloist with the New England Symphonic Ensemble. A new member to the group this year is horn player David Ohanian, a founding member of the Empire Brass and player with the Canadian Brass.

The theme of the day's concert will be "Scenes in Music," and composers represented will be Albinoni, Hindemith, Sampson, and the noted Bostonian, Daniel Pinkham.

The church is located at 16 Highland Ave. and there is plenty of parking available at the village car park. The concert is free of charge, but donations will be accepted. Come early and hear a playing of the bells of the church's 57-bell carillon a half-hour before the program.

'Hills of Hull' house tour

On Saturday, Sept. 28, there will be a unique opportunity to tour seven private homes tucked away in special locations in the neighborhoods of Hull to benefit Wellspring, a community-based human service organization serving Hull and surrounding towns.

Each of these 'Hills of Hull' homes is perched high on one of the town's many hills and captures a commanding view of the open ocean, harbor and even the Boston skyline. These lovely vistas also include Worlds End, and many of the islands of Boston Harbor, depending on which property is being visited.

Called "The Hills of Hull," the tour will be held between10 a.m. and 4 p.m. Advance tickets may be purchased for $20 prior to Aug. 28 at the following locations: Bookport, Hingham; Cards & Shards, Cohasset; and Mermaids in Hull. Tickets may also be purchased by sending a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Wellspring, 814 Nantasket Ave., Hull 02045 with an enclosed check.

The day of the tour tickets may be purchased for $25 at the Hull Town Hall. Further information about the tour is available by calling the staff at Wellspring at 781-925-3211.

Wellspring serves many towns throughout the South Shore. It is financed by income from its thrift shop, community donations and private grants.

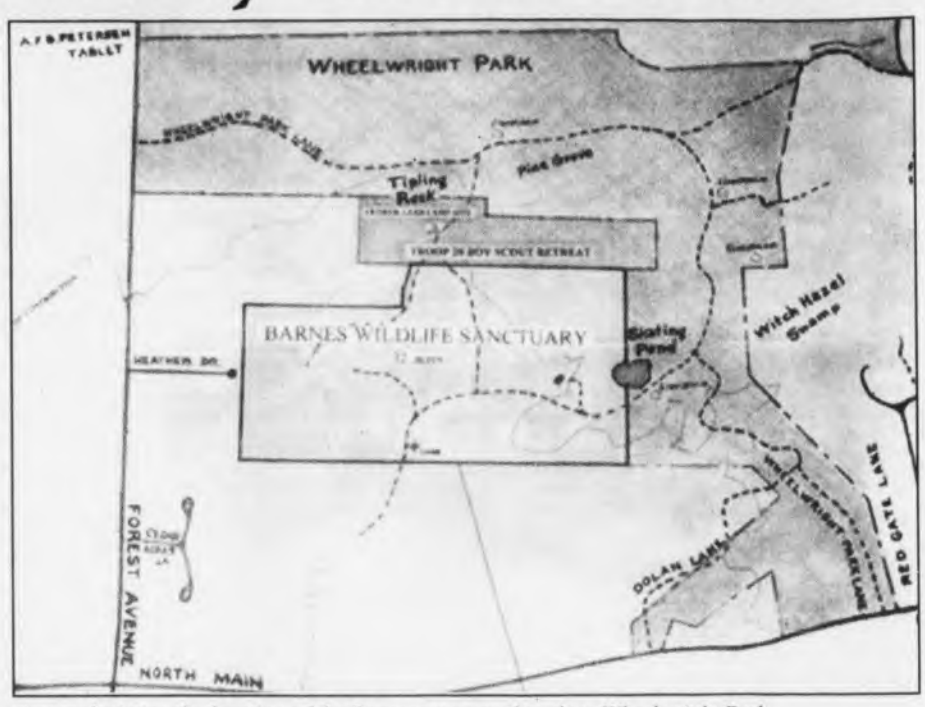
The unique aspect to the purchase is that none of the $1 million dollar price tag will hit the tax roll, excluding the 1.5 percent real estate surcharge that helps fund the Community Preservation Fund. On top of that, if the town mobilizes in support and a state grant works out, there could be no impact on the CPF, allowing them to further stretch its dollars for other projects.

The creative funding solution will utilize $500,000 from the MBTA as part of the right of way/open space mitigation, and a guaranteed $100,000 from the Cohasset Conservation Trust, a private organization. The remaining money will come one of three ways: First, the Conservation Trust has also committed $150,000 in matching funds for any private donations. If a full private participation comes to fruition, that would total another $300,000 towards the project. The Community Preservation Committee has also applied for a state grant. Were there to be any gaps, the CPC would step in with funding, but hopes that it doesn't get that far.

"We operate on a smaller budget than most towns," said Richard Silvia of the CPC. "Unlike other towns in the area that have a 3 percent surcharge, we have a 1.5 percent. So, we really need to stretch our money to the benefit of the town."

Sullivan was happy with the proposal.

"With the money that we are getting for the right of way, and some other funds, it's not going to hit the tax rolls," said Sullivan. "So, when you are able to buy conservation land and not have to put it in the operating costs of the town, that's great."



A map depicting the location of the Barnes property that abuts Wheelwright Park.

Selectman Tom Callahan, also a member of the CPC, pointed out that this type of hybrid-funding is the only way a town can effectively work for conservation.

"We've come to learn over the last few years that given the land prices in Cohasset, the town alone can rarely bear the whole load of a land purchase," said Callahan. "It's going to have to be mix of a variety of resources. When we did Turkey Hill it was a similar thing. Two towns getting together, a private land trust and a state grant."

Silvia, who spearheaded the project, is excited to see his work become "real."

"I'm excited., I'm really, really excited," said Richard Silvia. "I've been working on this for about six months. First it was just me and then Stuart (Ivimey, Chairman of the CPC) got involved and he's been tremendous and the Barnes people have been really supportive. The biggest thing for them was naming it after their father and having it stay the way it is."

Silvia noted that the property purchased is hard to distinguish from Wheelright Park.

"A lot of people go through Wheelright Park," said Silvia. "I wouldn't hesitate to say that thousands go through there, walking, riding horses and doing all kinds of things. But a lot of what people think is Wheelright Park, is the Barnes Property."

Pending a town meeting vote, that will no longer matter.

Plan for protecting surface water supply

The Cohasset Water Commission recently issued their new Surface Water Supply Protection Plan for Lily Pond and the Aaron River Reservoir, which was prepared by its watershed protection consultant, Norfolk Ram Group, LLC.

Some of the key recommendations of the Plan are:

• Protect the Zone A of Lily Pond and the Aaron River Reservoir by amending the Water Resource District bylaw to prohibit certain potentially hazardous land uses in that area, which is the strip of land 400 feet from the banks of the water bodies and 200 feet from the banks of their tributaries. The Water Commission is preparing a Warrant Article for the next Town meeting to adopt the recommended Zone A protections.

• Establish a partnership with the other three towns, Hingham, Norwell, and Scituate, in the watershed area for the Cohasset surface water supply, to see how these towns can work with Cohasset to protect the resource.

• Perform a limnological study of Lily Pond to determine the sources of nutrient loading, which include septic systems and storm water runoff, which is causing the growth of weeds and algae in the Pond. The Water Commission recently received a $25,000 state grant to perform this study, which is being conducted by ENSR, a national environmental consulting firm.

• Install groundwater monitoring wells between the former Norfolk Conveyor site and Lily Pond, to assess the potential migration of contaminants from the site, which is a state hazardous waste site because of historic contamination from industrial uses, to Lily Pond.

The Surface Water Supply Protection Plan was prepared by Norfolk for the Water Commission under a $45,000 grant from the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) and the United States Environmental Protection Agency (EPA). Copies of the Surface Water Supply Protection Plan are available for review at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library and at the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant.

POLICE BRIEFS

Speed patrols on Lamberts Lane

Police will continue to direct more patrols on Lamberts Lane and will ticket anyone violating motor vehicle laws, Police Chief Robert Jackson said.

Bill Foley, 184 Lamberts Lane, wrote a letter to Jackson on Sept. 4 outlining his concerns especially now that school has started.

Foley says he encountered three speeding vehicles (two dump trucks and a jeep) while driving his 12-year-old daughter to school on the first day of school last week. One of the vehicles was well over onto his side of the road and forced him into the gutter, he wrote.

In his letter, Foley requested on-going police patrols and speed traps on Lamberts Lane for the next few weeks "to catch the violators and send the message to all drivers who use this road that speeding and reckless driving will not be tolerated…"

Jackson said residents along the roadway are very sensitive to speeding because the road is narrow and there are a lot of children on the street. The Cohasset Golf Club is also on Lamberts Lane. The posted speed limit on the road is 15 m.p.h.

Police arrested 12 last month

August was a relatively quiet month for the Cohasset Police Department. There were 12 arrests, one for disorderly person, three for operating under the influence of liquor, two for outstanding warrants, one for possession of a class A and C substance, one for assault and battery on a child, one for operating after license is suspended, and finally three for protective custody.

During the month of August, the police department investigated 20 motor vehicle accidents nine of which resulted in personal injury. There were 157 motor vehicle citations issued totaling $7,280 in fines. Additionally, there were 383 parking tickets issued for $9,450 in fines. There were 10 criminal complaints issued.

Also in August, the emergency dispatch center received a total of $1,311 calls for police services, of those 137 were emergency 911 calls.

In the month of August there was one breaking and entering of a business.

'Beyond Tolerance' is topic Sept. 30

The Cohasset Diversity Committee is sponsoring the program "Beyond Tolerance" at Cohasset Middle High School on Monday evening, Sept. 30. The guest speaker will be Victor Kazanjian, Dean of Religious and Spiritual Life and Co-Director of the Peace and Justice Studies Program at Wellesley College. The program begins at 7:30 p.m. and will be held in the Cohasset Middle High School's new cafeteria.

ASP kickoff meeting

The Cohasset Appalachia Service Project will hold its informational meeting for the ASP-2003 trip this Sunday, Sept. 15, from 8-9 p.m. at the Second Congregational Church, next to Town Hall. All interested 10th-, 11th- and 12th-graders and their parents are urged to attend — registration is on a first-come, first-served basis. ASP would also love to see any adults interested in coming along as "advisors" on the trip!

The theme this year is "Handprints in Appalachia."

The meeting will start with a slide show from last year's trip. Veterans and their parents are welcome to come and share the memories.

Registration forms and schedules will be distributed and explained. The deadline for registration will be Oct. 1. Information is also available on line at www.CohassetASP.org.

"I would like to see it become an annual event," said Selectman Merle Brown, out of whose suggestion the ceremony was born. "Very sedate, not a lot of flare with it as we (did today), right along the same idea."

Brown and Town Manager Mark Haddad met with several religious leaders from around town last week to formulate a plan.

"Merle (Brown) and I met with Rev. (Cliff) Cutler, Rev. (Gary)Ritts, Rev. (Patricia) Hart and Fr. (John) Mulvehill," said Haddad. "We sat down and said we want to do something dignified, something to remember the tragedy, but we don't want to really do too much. So Father Mulvehill recommended that we start at 8:46 a.m. with the bell-ringing, do that from 8:46 a.m. to 9:03 a.m. followed by a moment of silence, followed by taps."

What followed was a solemn, tasteful and wonderful remembrance that was a credit to the town and those who planned it.

Most people remember exactly where they were on Sept. 11, 2001. It would be safe to say that those in attendance will also remember exactly where they were one year later.

Think globally, cast locally

Hingham actor lands another role in Huntingdon Theatre production

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

For many years, the only way you were likely to see a local actor at Boston's Huntington Theatre is if he or she was in the audience for a production. With few exceptions, under former Artistic Director Peter Altman, the respected regional theater rarely cast locally. Instead, most actors came from New York, Chicago or Los Angeles.

With the appointment two seasons ago of Nicholas Martin as the company's new artistic director, however, all that began to change.

Actress Alice Duffy, 73, plans to keep on acting as long as she can find good roles to play.

Indeed, "A Month in the Country," the Martin-directed drama which opens the Huntington's 21st season this week, features not one, but five local actors including Alice Duffy of Hingham.

"I knew Nicholas Martin's work only by reputation, before he came to Boston," explains Duffy. "I did know, of course, that he was regarded as an actor's director. He was even an actor himself, earlier in his career, which really helps. When he arrived here, I joined a group of professional local actors at an 'open call' audition that he held. I did a speech from 'Wit,' and not too much later I got the call about a small part in 'Dead End.'"

Duffy was cast in that play, which Martin directed, and later that same season in the Huntington's production of "Heartbreak House."

Duffy is delighted to be continuing her association with Martin in his production of "A Month in the Country," the Ivan

NRAS artist Kelleher picks flowers for Ventress show

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Norwell painter M. David Kelleher is an artist enraptured by natural beauty, particularly that of the floral variety.

It has been, by some considered fairly conventional, even cliched, subject matter for the creative muse. But Kelleher manages to give it a fresh and engaging perspective with his collection of 24 oil works contained in "Flora," a one-man show on view at Marshfield's Ventress Library through Sept. 20.

The exhibit is part of the Library's ongoing series showcasing members of Marshfield's North River Art Society (NRAS). Kelleher has enjoyed two previous individual shows in his Norwell hometown since 1999 while studying with NRAS's longtime instructor John Kilroy, both privately and in Kilroy's demanding Intensive Figure and Portrait Workshop.

Kelleher, a retired physician, began painting eight years ago while still active in his career as a senior M.D. serving at numerous Boston area hospitals and medical offices. An internist with a sub-specialty in endocrinology, Kelleher, boldly walked away from his lifelong profession several years ago in protest of then newly enforced HMO policies and regulations, Kilroy said.

At this point, the doctor immersed himself in his other major interests, including not only painting but also wood and craftworking. Kelleher's Ventress Library show displays some of the best results of the last few years' activities, with the artist also providing his own frames with moldings, trim and gold leaf.

Kelleher's works present the single-minded focus indicated by the show's title with a notably diverse array of subjects and perspectives, ranging from still lifes and landscapes to intimate sidewalk and backyard views. All of the works contain some type of floral element, many with self-descriptive titles such as "Red Maple," "Gomphrenas" and "Hydrangeas."

One of the most intriguing items is a direct product of Kelleher's study with Kilroy. "Statice," a flower-filled vase and book still life study, was a class project in which Kilroy's Workshop students were assigned to produce

James Franco and Robert De Niro worry about what's at the top of the stairs.

Nightmare by the sea

City by the Sea (B+)

Three of the best actors of our day come together in this terrific film. Oscar winner Robert De Niro plays a Long Island police officer, Vincent LaMarca, and Oscar-winner Frances McDormand plays the fictional role of the policeman's lady friend. They live one floor separated and share dinners and intimate moments but haven't wed, and she learns more, and rapidly, about Vincent than she expected. And James Franco — James who? — plays Vincent's son, Joey, who, during a botched drug purchase and in a panic stabs the dealer and goes on the lam, pursued both by his father and by the dealer's boss (William Forsythe, in another of his now almost trademark performances, of the kind of man you wouldn't want to cross).

Franco had a lead role in the short-lived, critically acclaimed but commercially unsuccessful series, "Freaks & Geeks," the only TV series in years to portray high schoolers believably; he was one of the freaks. Last year, in a TNT film biography, for which he received a Golden Globe award, he played James Dean, one of the best portrayals of a real figure on TV in a long time. Franco also played the son of the Green

Baked plums with marsala and orange

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

There are many recipes for poached or baked fruit which include white wine, sweet wine, or fortified wine. In my opinion, one of the best fruit/wine combinations is plums and marsala – the plums have enough flavor and tartness to stand up to the sweet marsala. I started with a recipe from a cookbook which called for 3 pounds plums and 2 1/2 cups of marsala and set out to get just the right balance between fruit and wine.

The first issue was the plums themselves. Anything but perfectly ripe fruit is a waste of time – the plums bake up mushy, not tender, and the flavor is second-rate. Some recipes suggest baking the fruit whole but I found that one saved cooking time by quartering them. As an added bonus, it is then easy to remove the skins, a step that dramatically improves the dish.

As far as the baking goes, I tested a variety of oven temperatures but 350 degrees was best; higher temperatures turned out unevenly cooked fruit. Covering the baking dish for some or all of the cooking time simply made the plums softer and I preferred the texture when baked uncovered.

As for the liquid, I added white wine, vermouth, red wine, and fruit juice. The white wine and vermouth thinned out the marsala syrup although the red wine wasn't bad although not better than the all-marsala version. Fruit juice made the liquid too sweet. I also tested dry versus sweet marsala and preferred the latter – it had more flavor and body. Other ingredients tested were cinnamon sticks, vanilla beans, lemon peel, almond extract, and orange peel. The only winner was orange peel – the others were either overpowering or unpleasant. I also liked a bit of orange liqueur added after cooking. I did find that the liquid needed to be reduced in a separate saucepan after the plums are baked to thicken it and to concentrate flavors. I tested using thickeners such as cornstarch but by reducing the liquid by half, it was clean-tasting and just right in terms of a syrupy consistency. I prefer to serve this dish the same day it is made, either warm, at room temperature, or cold. They are nice on their own or served with vanilla ice cream.

BAKED PLUMS WITH MARSALA AND ORANGE

Only make this dish with ripe, delicious plums, the sort that you would eat out of hand.

6 sweet, ripe plums
1 cup sweet marsala wine
1/3 cup sugar
3 strips orange peel, 1 by 3 inches, with the bitter white pith removed
1 tablespoon orange liqueur such as Cointreau or Triple Sec

1. Heat oven to 375 degrees. Quarter plums, removing pits. Arrange in a single layer in a small baking dish. (An 8 by 11-inch glass pan works well.) Mix the marsala and sugar and pour over plums. Bake until tender, about 25 to 30 minutes.

2. Pour off liquid into a small saucepan. Add the orange peel to the liquid and bring to a boil over high heat. Simmer briskly for about 5 minutes or until liquid is reduced by half. Remove from heat and add the liqueur.

3. When plums are cool, remove skins with a small paring knife. (They should slip off easily.) Serve plums with syrup spooned over the top. If serving later, pour syrup over plums, cover with plastic wrap, and refrigerate.

Turgenev classic which has been adapted by Brian Friel.

"Nicholas Martin has been just heavenly to work with. And, this is such a beautiful play. Each time we perform it, we learn something new about it," said Duffy by telephone last week just prior to a rehearsal. "Brian Friel's adaptation is exquisite and true to the spirit of the piece.

"Written in 1850, Turgenev's arresting portrait of marriage and romance in 19th century Russia encompasses five days in the lives of an aristocratic family. Duffy's character, "Anna," is the mother of the landowner and his troubled wife who are the central characters in the story.

"Anna is austere, domineering and very much a force in the household," according to Duffy. "Friel, however, has also given her a sense of compassion. She is not like anyone I've played before.

The thing I am enjoying most about this experience is that while Anna seems to be just a matronly old lady at first, she progresses and becomes much more interesting as the play goes along."

Duffy's life has progressed, too. She was been appearing in a production of one of her favorite plays, "The Importance of Being Earnest" in Rochester, N.Y., with plans to pursue acting in New York City, when she decided to suspend her career in favor of a life in Hingham.

That was 36 years ago. Duffy and her husband now have three children and three grandchildren. In 1986, Duffy decided the time had come to return to acting.

Since then, the 73-year-old actress estimates she has done more 1,000 performances of "Shear Madness" at the Charles Playhouse. Duffy also appeared in many productions with the now-defunct Nickerson Theatre in Norwell, and has done several plays with Boston-based theater companies. Her film and television credits include "Housesitter," "School Ties," "Autumn Heart," "Against the Law" and "Unsolved Mysteries."

"The theater is a very hard life, but it is always rewarding. I'm very lucky to be able to work professionally in the Boston area. Also, my husband and family could not be more supportive. This is very fortunate for me, because I plan on continuing to act as long as I can find good roles."

("A Month in the Country" will be presented by the Huntington Theatre, 264 Huntington Avenue, Boston,. through October 6. For tickets and information, call 617/266-0800.)

a painting work strictly from a verbal, written description and no visual model. The artist's resulting interpretation is skillful, although he is clearly more impressive with the benefit of working from a present subject as shown in his other works.

A favorite retreat for Kelleher is Newton's scenic Arnold Arboretum. Two of the artist's pieces, "Japanese Maples" and "Enkianthus," effectively apply his use of rich oil textures and interpretation of shadows and light. Kelleher also offers a sense of overcast, autumnal atmosphere with the waterfront landscape pieces. "Scituate Harbor" and "Goldfinch," the latter's title referring not to the boat anchored in the cove but to well-placed dabs of black and yellow perched in the marshes.

The artist's explorations further expand to the lush varieties of gold shadings highlighting his "Sunset" series, with scenes rendered "...from Castle Island," "...over Chinese Dogwoods" and "...over Commonwealth Avenue." "White Butterflies," a floral still life, adds a keen interpretation of shape and motion.

"Flora" an exhibit by North River Arts Society member M. David Kelleher will be on display through Oct. 19 at the Ventress Library Gallery in Marshfield Center. For more information call the NRAS at (781) 837-8091.

Plant bulbs in autumn for springtime rewards

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

The sights and sounds of nature filled the air as dusk fell on a warm September eve. Bambi emerged from the meadow alongside her attentive mother, pausing to graze on the lush, overgrown lawn. Each sampled a flower here and there as they meandered through the landscape on their way to the wooded lot beyond. Among the fading blossoms of bee balm, a tiny iridescent female hummingbird hovered momentarily, then darted off to sip nectar from a nearby Rose-of-Sharon. Temporarily satiated, the little jewel perched in the slender branches of an autumn olive, gurgling and twittering as she preened her magical wings.

Several resident frogs bobbed among the lily pads having jumped to safety when startled by our stalking tiger kitten. Moments later, she leaped into the air, successfully snaring an unsuspecting cicada, a giant insect resembling an oversized fly that started buzzing loudly as she gently pawed it in the grass. Cicadas are fascinating insects that produce a long, loud rattling hum from the treetops during late summer and early fall. Only the male of the species generates this distinctive, vibrating song.

The life cycle of these unusual insects is intriguing. Females insert their eggs into slits made in the tender young twigs of trees. Young hatch and fall to the ground, burrow into the soil and suck the juices from tree roots over a 2 to 20 year period depending on the species. During this phase, they molt periodically and resemble beetle larvae with large front legs, which they use as scoops. When full grown, the nymph emerges, climbs a tree trunk and attaches itself by its front claws. The external skin splits down the back and the adult emerges leaving behind a papery, brown, beetle-like shell. Large clear wings develop in a matter of a few hours.

The large dogday or harvestman cicadas have 2 to 4 life cycles and appear in late summer causing relatively little damage to trees. Their relatives, the periodical cicadas, which require 17 years to complete their life cycle, appear in early summer. Incorrectly referred to as the 17-year locust, the emergence of large broods of these cicadas can be predicted by entomologists.

These smaller cicadas can cause significant damage to fruit trees during the egg-laying phase. Winged adults generally live only one to five weeks.

Once I had rescued the hapless buzzing bug from my expert little hunter, I strolled through the yard with notebook in hand and started making a list of fall and springtime projects. This is an ideal time of year to critically view and analyze your lawn, gardens and shrubbery. Note trees and shrubs that require springtime pruning and perennials that need to be divided or transplanted. Photograph attractive plant combinations in containers and borders. A series of photographs taken throughout the growing season are invaluable tools to document your plantings. Those taken at season's end serve as reminders of the mature size of established plantings, a factor which many of us fail to recall during the spring planting season when there appears to be so much empty space between the plants in our borders. Take head counts on successful plantings of annuals that you may want to repeat next season. List changes to be made and open spaces that may need to be filled in this fall or next spring.

Each fall, I eagerly hunt for these open spaces in my overgrown borders, hoping to find homes for the numerous perennials that remain unplanted and spots to tuck in just a few bulbs. No garden seems complete without a few patches of crocuses, daffodils or tulips and autumn is the season for planting these hardy, spring-flowering bulbs.

Success with bulbs begins with the all-important process of selecting healthy, top quality stock. Purchase top-sized bulbs from reliable catalog sources or local nurseries. When buying locally, choose firm bulbs that are free of soft spots, deep cuts or blemishes. Do not be concerned by small nicks or the loss of the papery brown covering known as a tunic found on tulips, daffodils or crocuses, as this will not adversely affect the development of the bulbs. Select the largest specimens of each type of bulb or in the case of daffodils, ones having multiple noses, as these will most likely produce more flowers of greater size. Store in a cool, dry location if you anticipate a delay in planting.

All bulbs prefer loose, porous soils with excellent drainage to prevent rotting during dormancy. Soils comprised of sandy loam are ideal. Additions of organic material, including peat moss or compost, will improve drainage in heavy soils. Raised beds may necessary in low, damp locales. Loosen and prepare the soil prior to planting so the roots of the bulbs can develop easily.

While bulbs contain all the nutrients they require to flower the first year, to continue healthy growth and flowering, bulbs need phosphorus, a mineral that moves very slowly through the soil. To ensure its availability in future seasons, mix a teaspoon of superphosphate or bulb booster in the soil at the bottom of the planting hole. Although bone meal serves as an alternative, organic source of this nutrient, you may wish to avoid its use as animals often detect its scent and dig up your newly planted bulbs.

Goblin in "Spider-Man." His star is on the ascendancy: Locate a tape of the Dean biography, see "City by the Sea" and start telling the neighbors. Franco smoothly holds his own with De Niro and McDormand.

LaMarca was in Boston recently and said that much of has story has been "Hollywoodized," including the girlfriend, the contentiousness with his ex-wife (Patti LuPone plays an understandably shrill woman and carries it just to the edge of unlikeability), and a media frenzy about the young killer's dad being the son of a killer. Although the outlines of LaMarca's story are accurately found in the film, the divergences from it are worth noting if not worth fretting about. Still, I almost wish I didn't know how much of the film is pure fiction.

What sticks in the memory is the dialogue, a little pat in spots but not devolving into the kind of tough-cop-offers-tough-love or the you-abandoned-me-as-a-kid-so-why-should-I-trust-you-now cliches. The action relies more for its impact on the infrequent use of violence even in a story chockfull of opportunities for overkill. Joey is falling apart, realizing that he'll either fall to the cops or to the man whose subordinate he killed. He has a baby and a girlfriend, the baby's mother (Eliza Dushku), whom he avoids since he knows that they're both in danger from the villain, and the girlfriend feels incompetent to take charge of her life or raise her son adequately. Vincent's life, too, is hovering on unraveling; his son's has already crumbled.

"City by the Sea," set in a once pleasant, safe Long Island community that had become crime-ridden and derelict, is shot in a sometimes grayish-greenish hue that lends an other-worldly quality to it, as if it's something of a dream, a raw nightmare. The real story was a nightmare, for both LaMarcas, and the movie might be a hard sell. It doesn't suggest a happy time at the movies and offers only scant comfort in its final vignette.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 11

Pursue activities that help you to maintain a peaceful, positive attitude this morning. Jupiter opposes Neptune at 8:07 a.m., and the moon continues its travel in intensive Scorpio. Take time out for yourself; reflect on and learn from past experiences. Open your heart to higher visions. Read yesterday's advice. The Scorpio moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive at 6:52 p.m.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 12

The moon enters Sagittarius at 1:44 a.m., generating a lighter, brighter mood today and tomorrow. It is best to start new activities before 5:04 p.m., when the moon aligns with Jupiter, the planetary ruler of Sagittarius. On the other hand, don't go to extremes or make foolish promises or purchases. Use common sense. A lunar alignment to Mars at 5:28 p.m. warns you to drive defensively and be extra cautious when operating machinery. The remainder of the evening rates high for fun and games.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 13

It may be difficult to focus on practical matters and be productive today. Try to get work projects out of the way early in the day, so that you can spend extra time enjoying favorite sports and hobbies. The first quarter moon occurs at 2:08 p.m. A full moon is building up and will culminate September 21. The Sagittarius moon continues to generate an upbeat, adventurous mood. A lunar alignment to Uranus makes this a great evening for partying. Take a walk on the wild side.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 14

The planet Mercury takes the spotlight today. At 3:39 p.m. Mercury, standing at 13-degrees of Libra, begins retrograde travel until October 6. That means that you should avoid making major decisions, purchases, commitments in this period. The Sagittarius moon becomes inactive at 3:54 a.m. until 6:47 a.m., when a Capricorn moon takes over. If you have work projects to accomplish, this is a great weekend for it. Tackle jobs you have been putting off; you can get them out of the way.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 15

The moon continues to travel in pragmatic Capricorn throughout the day. Zero in on responsibilities you have taken on or commitments you have made to others. Now is the time to follow through. Plan a busy day. Don't sabotage your efforts by getting caught up in worries or fears. Focus on work or study projects. You can be most productive.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 16

The Capricorn moon aligns with the sun and becomes inactive at 1:58 a.m., making for a slow-starting morning. Take your time. Make up a list of things to do; tackle chores, errands, jobs that need a finishing touch. Influences begin to turn around at 2:54 p.m., when the moon enters innovative Aquarius. The remainder of the day is prime for participating in group activities, team sports, charitable drives, community endeavors.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17

An Aquarius moon sets the stage for an upbeat, social day. A lunar polarity to Jupiter this morning, however, warns you to know your limits. Don't overdo or overextend. Sleep on new ideas and don't make major commitments. The Aquarius moon forms easy contacts to Mercury in the afternoon and Pluto this evening. Planetary influences are prime for problem-solving, troubleshooting. Keep an open mind. Be willing to explore new ideas; be open to new experiences. You can cut through obstacles and find new inspiration and insights.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 18

Yesterday's planetary influences affect today. Avoid rigid time schedules; be flexible. An Aquarius moon may point you in directions you would not normally travel. This day is ideal for trying something new and different. Others may bring interesting or exciting news or ideas. Spend extra time on the information highway; chat, network, collaborate. Social activities get the green light this evening.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 19

The moon enters Pisces at 1:18 a.m., and the final windup to this month's full moon begins. The full moon will culminate Saturday, at the tail end of Pisces. Today a 90-degree alignment of Venus and Neptune warns you to stay alert and use common sense. Don't take anything at face value. Postpone making purchases or promises. On the other hand, this planetary combination is ideal for developing projects that require your imagination and creativity.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 20

Lunar alignments to Mars and Pluto this morning warn you to take it slow and easy. Drive defensively. Give greater attention to accuracy and details. Keep a cool head. The Pisces full moon continues to build throughout the day. Channel high energy constructively. You can make great headway developing creative and artistic projects. The stage is set for an exciting, 'anything can happen' kind of evening. Forget your troubles and go for the good times.

TRAINING FOR NEW POOL OF SWIM VOLUNTEERS Swim With A Special Child hopes to expand its pool of volunteers as the program plunges into its 31st year of weekly swim classes for students with mental and/or physical disabilities. SWASC will hold orientation and training sessions for new and returning volunteers Sept. 17 and 24 from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. at the Massachusetts Hospital School in Canton. Free child care is provided for training and for weekly Tuesday classes beginning Oct. 1. Swimmers of all ability levels are needed to swim one-on-one with students age 3 to 22. No special skills are required, and a SWASC staff of class leaders and swim instructors works with each pair of swim buddies. Volunteers may swim for one, two or all three class sessions on Tuesdays from 9:15 to 11:45 a.m., Johnson said, and "floaters" and "snowbirds" are also welcome to come when they can.

PARENTAL STRESS LINE: Make a difference for children and their parents. parents' and children's services needs volunteers as telephone counselors for the parental Stress Line. A comprehensive training is given and volunteers can choose from a weekly three and a half hour shift, day or evening, weekday or weekends. Located by the Back Bay T stop. There is training class scheduled for Sept. 28, at 10 a.m.

THE CHILDREN'S MUSEUM IN EASTON is sprucing up for the busy year ahead as it closes its doors for its annual Fall Spruceup from Sunday, Sept. 1 through 16. Volunteers are needed. If you can clean, paint, sew and mend, launder, do light carpentry or have any other skills, we can use you. For more information call 508-230-3789.

BIG SISTER ASSOCIATION IS SEEKING VOLUNTEERS Offer support and friendship to a girl between the ages of 7 and 15. Good grades for the opening of school last week

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Despite two major construction projects and a week-old school department-based busing plan, the Cohasset schools opened with minimal problems last week.

The construction at the Deer Hill School and the middle-high school continues, with the Deer Hill scheduled for completion this December and the middle-high school one year later, but students and faculty are beginning to see the benefits of the renovations. The students are operating in new areas of construction and the buildings were ready to open as scheduled.

"It is absolutely a credit to the people that have been involved in this," said Supt. Edward Malvey, listing all the town factions involved in the smooth opening. "I've been involved in seven construction projects. They are never always 100 percent easy, but this has been the most time-pressured one in terms of making sure that we were ready in a livable safe environment."

As for the busing situation, Malvey feels that the first week of operation was a success, given the circumstances.

"We had some new drivers, so sure there were some glitches, stops being missed or routes not fully understood by the drivers," said Malvey. "We were able to make the final arrangements just a week before we got into school, but again, with Ivan (Klimko, business manager) and the bus drivers we are making things work."

"It is absolutely a credit to the people that have been involved in this."

— Supt. Edward Malvey

The problems that did present themselves the first day were minimized thereafter.

"I think that the first day was probably a little rough time-wise trying to get everyone in, but we didn't lose anyone," said Malvey. "The mishaps the second day smoothed out a little more and I anticipate that the third day and the fourth day will just get better and better and better."

Building Committee Chairman Rob Spofford was present at last week's School Committee meeting in order to highlight some of the people involved in the smooth transition to the start of the school year.

"I received a letter from the architect today, stating from both the contractors, architect, and all the sub-contractors, that this project would not have gone as smoothly as it has without all of (Project Manager) Simon Tempest's work.," said Spofford. "I know that you spent a fair amount of money in the budget on that project manager and that really has come back to us 100 fold."

Spofford also complimented Malvey for his work on the project as well as the teachers.

"In walking around these past evenings, it is obvious that the teachers really made an effort working here over the weekend," said Spofford. "Labor Day weekend is intended to be a time where we sit back and enjoy ourselves. Particularly at the Deer Hill School, with the elementary school environment, at least from a layman's perspective, you can really see the teachers had gone in there over the Labor Day weekend and I understand from Ted (Malvey) and Paul (Callahan), those teachers did give up their Labor Day Weekend this year because we did push the envelope a little bit, maybe closer than we intended to do."

First-grader Antje White musters her classmates before they file into the Osgood School for the first day last week.

School Committee member Pat Martin then singled out Spofford for praise as well.

"I'd like to thank you as well Rob for providing the leadership for this project as well as back with the Osgood School project," said Martin. "You did a find job of keeping this project, which is twice the size of the last project in the same mode as being on-time, and on-schedule without a lot of glitches."

School Committee chairman Rick Flynn summed up the opening from his perspective.

"I think it was just a fantastic effort by everyone involved," said Flynn. "Given the condition of the school for the opener, it really is a testament of everyone working together. It's not done, but the schools opened on time and they are safe."

Highland Ave. hosts primary politicking

32 percent is local turnout

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The folks walking their dogs, playing with their children, or sitting on the benches and watching the ducks in the pond on a pristine late summer day on the Town Common seemed oblivious to all the politicking along Highland Avenue.

And who could blame them. The lawn had returned green with recent rain and the sun was sparkling through the blue-sky overhead — making the 300-year-old Common more a place for relaxation and reflection than one to play out the hard world of politics.

Nevertheless, diehard campaigners for a range of candidates lined "political row" along Highland Avenue as they do in Cohasset for every town, state or national election.

They were there again Tuesday supporting hometown candidates Bruce Herzfelder (state treasurer) and Nathaniel

Police, fire HQ add on floated

Would add space to existing building

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

It's no secret the police and fire department have cramped quarters.

Back in 1962 when it was built, the police side of the facility housed 10 full-time police officers, plus the chief. Today it serves 19 full-time officers, plus six civilian dispatchers, a secretary, an animal control officer and three seasonal police officers.

Where the police station was built the communications center consisted of a wooden desk, rotary telephone and radio.

And 40 years ago, female firefighters and paramedics were virtually non-existent. Today, they need accommoda-

Train right-of-way is railroaded, critics say

Land taking at midnight

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

If you've never read the Massachusetts Constitution, you're not alone.

But John Bewick, head of the anti-Greenbush Advocates for Transportation Alternatives, dubbed AfTA, has read it and he understands what "Article 97" means. And it's likely the state legislators know what it means too.

Article 97 protects land from being taken out of conservation or parkland use without a two-thirds roll call vote of the both houses of the state Legislature.

So when Cohasset agreed last year to a friendly land-taking by the MBTA of its town-owned, six-mile rail bed in exchange for $1.6 million for not opposing the matter in court – it got Bewick's attention.

AfTA subsequently launched a lawsuit telling Cohasset it didn't have the right to give up the right-of-way without the vote. The opportunity to vote should have provided a public hearing on the issue and a chance to debate Greenbush on Beacon Hill.

But any hope for a public airing on Greenbush was doused at 2:01 a.m., Aug. 1 just before the end of the legislative session (that was supposed to end two hours earlier on July 31), when the 40-page, $401 million Transportation Bond Bill got its two-thirds vote in the Senate without any debate, save a lone voice from state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth. The bill passed the House that same night. Bond bills provide authorization for the state to borrow money for construction projects.

Buried in the bill was the blanket authorization enabling the MBTA to perform land takings.. Attaching the authorization to the bond bill, may have killed the lawsuit, although AfTA lawyers are still reviewing the matter.

"It was very disappointing not to even get a hearing on such an issue," said Bewick, a former state Secretary of Environmental Affairs. "The process, without open hearings, diminishes Article 97 protections of open space and conservation lands, and should be of significant concern to environmentalists around the state."

In the House, state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, who is a Greenbush opponent, tried to strike the "Greenbush language" but to no avail.

"My feeling was Article 97 means we were supposed to have an up or down vote and not try an end-run around a lawsuit with language stuck in a 40-page bill at 2 a.m.," said Bradley, also pointing out there was only one copy of the bill floating around for 160 legislators.

Bradley explained the bond bill also contained money for local projects, making it difficult to rally any support from fellow legislators to oppose it.

"The majority of legislators had something they wanted in it, so it was very hard to get enough votes against the bill because so many have a stake in it," he said.

Bradley, who voted against the bond bill, said it was his understanding the Secretary of Transportation inserted the language to "codify the mitigation agreements" with Cohasset and Scituate, which also owned its right-of-way, and make the lawsuit moot by a two-thirds vote on this bill.

"This is certainly not the way to do business," he said. "I'd rather have a true Article 97 vote."

Hedlund, who is a member of the Transportation Committee, said the Greenbush right-of-way, land-taking authorization is just a small example of the "textbook, sleazy back-room politics" that took place with the bond bill, which he voted against.

For one thing the bond bill never went to Conference Committee, which irons out differences between the Senate and

Taking community preservation to heart

New act has both benefits, challenges

Stuart Ivimey outside the Cohasset Historical Society's John Wilson House, which is being renovated thanks to the Community Preservation Act that the town adopted last year.

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Should you happen upon Stuart Ivimey strolling through the Village one sunny morning, beware.

Comment on the weather, ask about his family, but under no circumstances mention the Community Preservation Act.

Should even the slightest breeze inadvertently turn your head towards the vicinity of Elm Street and the John Wilson House renovation – the first tangible work of the Community Preservation Committee, of which Ivimey is chairman – your fine, warm morning will soon become late afternoon.

Consider yourself warned.

The above is obviously a dramatization, but it is firmly rooted in fact. Stuart Ivimey is many things – a former Navy Lieutenant, a lawyer, and a husband among them – but the fairly new Cohasset resident (The Ivimeys moved to town in May of 1999), has attacked his role as the chairman of the CPC with a ferocity worthy of his military background and an aptitude derived from his legal training.

"It's probably the law background and the desire to do something for and in the town (more so than the military background)," said Ivimey of decision to serve on the committee. "It seemed like a great opportunity to make a contribution to the town at a time when the town is facing many fundamental changes with the train, revitalization of downtown area and with 40B."

But sitting down in Ivimey's office, you get the feeling that there is something deeper driving him. He loves the CPA something fierce, despite its flaws.

The CPA is a unique structure, which is what attracts Ivimey to it. It draws its funds from two sources – the real estate tax surcharge (in Cohasset it is 1.5 percent) and some level of matching funds from the state, derived from a roughly

The Zoning Board of Appeals decided to continue the hearing until Oct. 7 on the remodeling of 491 Jerusalem Road (across from Linden Drive) because the revised plans were not on file at Town Hall for two weeks prior to Monday's hearing.

The initial decision, which came in February, was appealed by the owners, Margaret Fitzpatrick and William Shelton. The court remanded the case back to the town's Board of Appeals.

"We had a decision in February," said Heidi Condon, of HC Design in Cohasset, the architect hired by the owners. "It was a limited decision. The only reason we appealed it was to give us time to work within the limitations that the town put on the project."

Condon stated that the mix-up was "merely a misunderstanding," and that the plans will be on file as soon as possible.

Coastal cleanup

$25K grant to study Lily Pond

ENSR, a national environmental consulting firm, is performing a water quality study of Lily Pond for the Water Commission under a $25,000 grant from the state Department of Environmental Management.

"This study will help us to improve drinking water quality," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission. "by giving us valuable information about the sources of nutrient loading into Lily Pond and what to do about it. Lily Pond is beset by weeds and algae, in a condition known as eutrophication, caused by the drainage of nitrates and phosphates, primarily from septic systems and storm water runoff from the surrounding area into the pond."

The Lily Pond study includes sampling of pond water and sediments, review of available data and past efforts to manage vegetation, evaluation of key watershed features that impact the pond, assessment of pond biota including existing plants, use of multiple nutrient and water load estimation strategies to characterize the range of likely nutrient inputs, and evaluation of the full range of possible management actions and selection of recommended alternatives on the basis of expected water quality improvements, technical feasibility, and cost effectiveness.

"This study will also evaluate the amount of total organic carbon (TOC) in the pond," said McNabb. "Since TOC is a precursor of the production of trihalomethanes (THM's), a contaminant caused by the interaction of chlorine with solid matter in the water, this study will help us to further reduce THM levels in the water supply to better protect public health."

The study will cost a total of $50,000, paid for by a $25,000 grant from the Department of Environmental Protection with a local match from the Water Commission. The study began in July and is expected to be concluded by the end of December, 2002.

Public invited to tour new schools

Supt. Edward Malvey, the School Committee and the School Building Committee are extending an invitation to all interested citizens for walking tours of the newly finished sections of the middle-high and Deer Hill school construction projects.

An Unguided tour of both schools is scheduled for 8:30-10:30 a.m., Saturday, Sept. 21. Although visitors will be on their own, someone will be available to answer questions, Malvey said.

Anyone with questions, should call Malvey's office at 781-383-6111.

40B ZBA-Avalon schedule listed

The Zoning Board of Appeals has scheduled the following 40-B meetings related to the AvalonBay project:

10 a.m., Saturday, Sept. 21 (site visit, 155 King St.)

7:30 p.m., Monday, Sept. 23 (Avalon's presentation)

7:30 p.m., Monday, Oct. 28 (Avalon's presentation)

Nov. 18 - Special Town Meeting

7:30 p.m., Monday, Dec. 16 (input from various town boards)

Meeting dates are subject to change. All 40B meetings, with the exception of the site visit and Special Town Meeting, will be held in the selectmen's office and will be televised.

Free thermometer exchange Oct. 26

Cohasset residents who bring toxic mercury thermometers or thermostats to the hazardous waste collection on Oct. 26 will be given a free digital fever thermometer. The Town of Cohasset joins a statewide effort to eliminate mercury from households and from the environment in providing this opportunity, in conjunction with American Ref-Fuel at SEMASS and the South Shore Recycling Cooperative. Thermometers may also be swapped at the Cohasset Board of Health during regular office hours while supplies last.

The toxic heavy metal is liquid at room temperature, and evaporates readily. A mercury thermometer contains about a gram of the element, an amount sufficient to render a ton of fish unfit for consumption. Proper cleanup of a broken thermometer is very difficult and should be done by a professional. If incinerated, mercury becomes airborne, and washes into lakes, streams and groundwater when it rains. It is concentrated in the bodies of organisms that consume it as it moves up the food chain. Improper disposal of mercury thermometers is a major source of mercury contamination in fish. It is estimated that 17 tons of mercury from thermometers is released into the environment annually.

Other common household products that contain mercury include fluorescent lamps, non-electronic thermostats, and many button batteries. Such products should be disposed of separately from household trash at the Oct. 26 Household Hazardous Product Collection from 9 a.m.-1 p.m., or at the Universal Waste Shed, at the Recycling Transfer Station.

For more information, call the South Shore Recycling Cooperative at 508-785-8318.

Zoning Board settles in for a long Avalon process

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

It was more of an orientation session than a public hearing, but Monday night's ZBA meeting regarding AvalonBay's plan to develop a 200-unit apartment complex at 155 King Street (across from Atlantic Bagel on 3A) under a comprehensive permit signaled the first appearance of Chapter 40B in Cohasset in over a decade.

The town has previously faced two proposed developments, in 1987 and 1989, but both projects stalled and were not built, despite being approved with conditions.

> "We will be in session until everybody has been heard, at least on relevant issues."
> — ZBA Chairman Woody Chittick

Zoning Board of Appeals Chairman Woody Chittick began the meeting with a 15-minute introduction, laying down the ground rules for what he expects to be a hearing measured in months, not weeks. Most importantly, at least to the 30-some-odd people in attendance, was the decision not to allow public participation until after all the facts involved have been presented. At that time, though, Chittick promised that all pertinent questions would be entertained.

"We will be in session until everybody has been heard, at least on relevant issues," said Chittick. "We do believe though that the up-front time is going to be most valuably spent if we assemble a common fact base, rather than having one person having assumption A and another person having assumption Z."

Zoning Board member Barbara Power noted that it will be very easy to get information on where the hearing stands by attending the meetings themselves or watching them on cable. Power also pointed out that transcripts of the meetings will be available within two weeks of each meeting.

"We will not stop these hearings until everybody has had the opportunity to ask questions," said Power, who urged the public to stay informed on the issue.

Chittick first established several facts in terms of the board's responsibility before shifting into the ground rules. Chittick noted that the board is sworn to "uphold state law," and at this point in time that state law is Chapter 40B. He also stressed that the board was entering into the process from an unbiased viewpoint. Chittick went on to add that the board must be careful not to stray from its areas of jurisdiction – health, safety, and the environment. To do so would open the door for a successful appeal by the proponent.

After Chittick spoke, AvalonBay Vice President of Development Scott Dale launched into a broad overview of the project, addressing, at least topically, issues as varied as the amount of school-aged children the new development would bring, and the procedure for trash disposal.

"I think the board set the stage for a positive hearing process, which is nice to see right from the start," said Dale.

Above is a view of Avalon Estates in Hull, and to the right is Avalon Orchards in Marlborough. The Hull project is not 40B, but the Marlborough project is. Avalon says that the building style is indicative of what is planned for Cohasset.

"I think that it always helps to set people's expectations on how it's going to work.."

Both sides touched on the theme of negotiation, with Chittick saying that "negotiation and compromise are essential components of the process."

"In the final analysis, we'll have to make a decision whether to approve this project or not approve it and under what conditions or modifications," said Chittick. "That is our job and we have to be unbiased, like a court of law would have to be unbiased."

Process for Avalon hearings explained

Zoning Board of Appeals Chairman Woody Chittick took the first 15 minutes of the opening of the AvalonBay hearing Monday to make some clarifications and lay down some "ground rules."

The main points are:

- The ZBA is sworn to uphold state law and the state law that the board needs to uphold in this case is Chapter 40B (the state affordable housing law).
- The board noted that this hearing was to determine the merits of the application of AvalonBay Cohasset Inc., not to debate the merits of Chapter 40B.
- The ZBA can only base judgement on the areas of health, safety, and the environment.
- The board noted that there is a difference between a public hearing and a public forum. After board members feel comfortable that they have heard all the facts, there will be ample time allowed for legitimate concerns to be heard.
- Up until that point, any citizen comment should come in the form of a written letter, which the board will take into consideration.
- The board expects this to be a lengthy process, but intends to keep the public fully informed. The meetings will be televised on cable.
- The board urged all involved to provide "fact-based, not emotional" testimony.

AvalonBay Cohasset

- 200 apartment homes in 18 buildings. – six 16-unit buildings, four 10-unit buildings, and eight 8-unit buildings arranged in a circular pattern.
- All buildings are Direct Entry/Direct Access, which means that there will be private, ground-level entry for all apartments.

CRC is part-time

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation has reduced its hours of operation from full-time to part-time. As a result the CRC will no longer have regular office hours. The office will be open in the day or evening by appointment only.

If you need assistance or would like to make an appointment please leave a voice message for Dean Rizzo, Executive Director at (781) 383-2449. The CRC office is located at 87 Elm St., which is across from Kimball's By The Sea.

Health programs

Parents, teachers, and school and health professionals are invited to attend "Making Connections, Making a Difference, Making It Work," a free community program presented by the South Shore School Partnership for Health, on Thursday, Oct. 3, from 7 to 9 p.m. at Notre Dame Academy, 1073 Main St., Hingham.

The evening's presenter will be Edward Hallowell, MD, director of The Hallowell Center for Cognitive and Emotional Health. Hallowell is a psychiatrist and author of several books; his newest, "The Childhood Roots of Adult Happiness," will be released this fall. He will lead a discussion focusing on the importance of connections between students and adults in the home and school settings, and identify practical strategies to build and sustain those connections.

For more information on the program, call Kim Noble, RN, at 781-794-7415.

Police, fire headquarters add on is floated

tions.

The good news is the police and fire departments could see improvements to their headquarters. But the bad news is those improvements, estimated at costing more than $600,000, will not solve all of their issues.

"It's a Band-Aid approach to a hemorrhage situation," Police Chief Robert Jackson told selectmen last week.

Jackson, however, is pleased selectmen supported the placement of an article on the Special Town Meeting warrant for $50,000 that would cover the cost of detailed architectural designs to expand the existing building. If voters give the OK at the Nov. 18 Special Town meeting, the bid process will begin and ideally the town would approach the spring Town Meeting for the money to cover the rest of the project, which would be paid for through retiring debt service and not affect the tax rate.

"I'm pleased that they supported it," said Jackson of the plan. "It's something that I'm going to have to deal with, but it is a good temporary fix."

However, the cost gave Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan pause. The project will add 1,500 square feet of space, through an addition in the front and the back of the existing structure. Since the project is so small and it will require six to eight months of construction, the price per square foot stands at more than $400, nearly twice that of the school project.

"It's not the long-term solution, and it seems like a lot of money for what we are accomplishing," said Sullivan said. "And that remains to be seen how that might be reduce from the $622,290 figure they were talking about."

Gene S. Raymond of Strekalovsky and Hoit Architects, which did the initial design and cost estimate, said he would rather quote a high price than have to come back and ask for more money from the town. Town Manager Mark Haddad pointed out Strekalovsky and Hoit have an excellent reputation in terms of cost estimation and that until the project is put out to bid, the accuracy of that estimated price cannot be known.

"My understanding is that they want to fund fees to design the project and put it out to bid and then come back to Town Meeting with a bid in hand," said Raymond.

Selectmen supported an article on the Special Town Meeting warrant for $50,000 that would cover the cost of detailed architectural designs to expand the existing building.

The addition on the front of the existing building, which will blend into the existing architecture, will create a large squad room for the police station, a report writing area, and an office space and on the fire department side, the expansion will add female firefighter quarters. A room for the captains, who presently exist in a cramped space, will be built on the back of the building..

"Well, they are never working together," said Fire Chief Roger Lincoln of his captains. "But the problem is that they each have their own designation Fire Prevention, EMS, Training and Administrative Assistant. They need a workspace where their records can be kept so that whoever is filling in for them when they are not working goes into that work area and retrieves the proper paperwork or research that is needed."

While concerned about the price, Sullivan sees the need for the expansion.

"I understand where the police and fire are coming from, but you are kind of caught between a rock and hard place," said Sullivan. "We don't have the funds right now to do the whole project and yet they have space constraints that they need to respond to, especially with the female firefighters and such."

An article to build the police department a new $4 million, 11,000-square-foot headquarters on land that resident Paul Barry donated to the town for that purpose off Route 3A, and let the firefighters take over the current station failed last year.

"Unfortunately we went to Town Meeting last November with a proposal to move the police station out," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "Because of the uncertainty of the school building and all of the other outstanding capital projects and the impact on the taxes, the town said, "Whoa, slow down. We understand the need, but we don't think we can afford this."

Despite its failure last year, the plan to move the police is still the long-term plan.

Library building to get exclusive real estate agent

$700K needed for the property

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The sale of the Paul Pratt Library on South Main Street has once again proven that these days, everybody needs an agent.

For the library, that agent will be of the real estate variety, but nonetheless, after two unsuccessful turns out to bid, the town is considering hiring one of the local real estate vendors to market the property.

"By allowing them to exclusively market, by soliciting bids from them to exclusively market, this might give them an incentive to bring someone to the table," said Town Manager Mark Haddad.

"This might give them an incentive to bring someone to the table."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

The selectmen, on the recommendation of Haddad, rejected the latest bid of $500,000 from Mitchell Properties of Boston at their last meeting on Sept. 10. Mitchell would have paid $700,000 if the building could receive a variance allowing it to house seven units — $100,000 per unit — but Haddad said that obtaining such a variance would be impossible because of the density.

The property is zoned single-family residential so multi-family use would require a variance from the Zoning Board of Appeals, Building Inspector Bob Egan said.

The sale is linked to the renovation of the old Osgood School into the new Paul Pratt Library, because the town built a sale price of $700,000 into the new library's project budget. The new library is already under construction. The remainder of the financing came from a Town Meeting appropriation of $600,000, a state grant of $1.5 million and $1.1 million raised through private donors by the Library Trustees.

"Right now, we just can deal with the bid submitted, it just doesn't fit our finances," said Haddad.

The town will solicit bids from Atlantic Brokerage Group, Coastal Countryside Properties, Coldwell Banker Hunneman Hallmark, and Dwyer and Mullen. In order to be in compliance with state law, the property will still have to be put out to bid. This means that an agency, if one is selected, would bring a bidder to the town. The town would then open the property up to bid again. If the agency's bidder was the high bidder, the town would pay the fee, otherwise, the town would sell to the highest bidder, not paying the real estate fee.

The Attorney General and Town Counsel both signed off on the plan.

Numbers to be run on burying wires

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Telephone polls are ubiquitous.

They are so common, that they tend to blend into the surroundings.

If selectmen are so inclined and Town Meeting agrees, the telephone polls in the village could pull a disappearing act.

One of the options selectmen are considering for the Village Revitalization Project, which is now coming into focus, is burying the utilities underground. That aspect of village revitalization could cost from $800,000 to $1.2 million depending on the scope: whether to bury utility wires in all or part of the village. In order to pay for burying the wires, the town may have to ask Town Meeting for either a debt exclusion or capital exclusion of Proposition 2-1/2. If Town Meeting gives the go ahead, the project would still have to win a simple majority at the ballot box.

Last week, selectmen asked Haddad to "run numbers" on what the cost would be under various scenarios. A capital exclusion to Proposition 2-1/2 is a one-time, one-year override, while a debt exclusion provides an override for the life of the debt service.

"There's a shortfall of between $400,000 and $800,000 depending on which options the selectmen take," said Town Manager Mark Haddad.

The rest of the project is already funded by a variety of sources. The town received a $1.5 million state Public Works Economic Development grant for the for the streetscape revitalization, $1 million for the James Brook culvert as part of the MBTA mitigation package, a $169,000 Transportation Enhancement grant for the St. Stephen's sidewalk, while the installation of a new water main, at a cost of $38,000 will be paid for by the Water Department. (The MBTA is going pick up the tab, estimated at $500,000, to fix up the town parking lot, which was also part of the Greenbush Mitigation Agreement).

Haddad will report to the board at its Sept. 24 meeting.

Last winter an article seeking authorization for a surcharge on residents' utility and cable-TV bills to pay for installing underground wires was withdrawn prior to Town Meeting due to lack of support. The Planning Board and selectmen were opposed to assessing surcharges.

Board has doubts about illegal sewer hookups

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Despite recent rumors, Sewer Commissioner Gary Vanderweil does not believe that residents are connecting to the town's sewer system clandestinely, but warned that anyone who was would be caught.

"I really don't believe that anyone has connected surreptitiously," said Vanderweil. "In the end, everyone has to have a permit, so as everyone hooks up we'll find out."

"I really don't believe that anyone has connected surreptitiously."
— Gary Vanderweil, Sewer Commission

Vanderweil said that as the process draws to a close, the commission will investigate those parties who have not yet connected.

"We'll count up connections and permits and visit homes in the end, so no one can get away with it for too long," said Vanderweil. "If, and when we catch them, we would back charge them fully."

Fellow Sewer Commissioner Ray Kasperowicz echoed Vanderweil's statements at a recent meeting.

"All I can say, and what I think that Gary told you, is that we don't know of anyone," said Kasperowicz. "Obviously, at some point we have to reconcile who has signed up. We'll look at houses on a street, and see which ones have signed up, and whoever hasn't signed up, see are they on a financial waiver or something like that, but it is just a process."

House versions, as is the usual practice. However, under the rules, the bill can reach the floor if both versions are "melded together" so each side gets what it wants. That appeared to be the case, until Hedlund discovered the Massport provision that would have allowed communities affected by Logan and Hanscom airport traffic a seat at the table, was no longer in there.

"The ultimate Transportation Bond Bill package was done in violation of the rules by a few selected leaders in a backroom deciding what should be in there," said Hedlund.

In addition to the land-taking issue and the Massport Advisory Board (that contains no provisions to give a voice to communities like Hingham, Hull and Cohasset that are most affected by the proposed Logan expansion), also packaged in the bill were a change in the makeup of the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority Board, and full funding from the state's general fund for the development of the Fall River-New Bedford Commuter Rail Line.

"Within this bill are several gifts to leadership members that have been carefully crafted to evade further legislative action in some cases, and exclude parties with interests in the process from involvement in others," Hedlund said.

Hedlund, a vocal Greenbush critic, said he is not upset about the Bond Bill solely because of the Greenbush provision. He had doubts an Article 97 vote on the land transfer would have gone the way AfTA had hoped, even if the Legislature did it in the light of day.

But he is outraged by the change in the Mass. Turnpike Board that weakens the autonomy of the board by allowing two more members appointed by the governor, and the state funding of the Fall River-New Bedford line. He said two years ago, the Legislature agreed the MBTA would be financially self-sufficient.

"Now language tucked in the Transportation Bond Bill says that work will not be done under the MBTA's bond cap and not under its normal funding structure."

The whole scenario showed a lack of leadership and openness in government, Hedlund said.

Bewick said open government is the best protection against special interests "that put self interest above the public interest."

"We may or may not have prevailed, but an open debate would have illuminated the issue and led to better decision-making in my view," he said about the Greenbush right-of-way issue.

New train lawsuit looms

John Bewick, head of AfTA, says the group expects to take legal action in the near future over state Department of Environmental Protection wetlands permit issues in Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate.

"In this case, we will be defending the powers of local conservation commissions that are built into the Wetlands Protection Act and will be working with the Massachusetts Association of Conservation Commissions in defending positions taken by all three local conservation commissions," he said.

Bewick explained when a request for a wetlands permit is denied by the local conservation commission for inadequate information, as is the case with the MBTA's Greenbush project, then the DEP must remand the request for a permit back to the local conservation commissions after the information is complete.

But the DEP denied the permit on the basis of statutory requirements (the project will impact more than 5,000 square feet of bordering vegetated wetlands) without sending it back to the local commissions, he said.

"The MBTA has now gone forward and applied for a variance to the Wetlands Protection Act," Bewick said. "We agreed with the unified positions of all three local conservation commissions and the Massachusetts Association of Conservation Commissions that this is a violation of the act and will challenge the process being used."

Student services director resigns

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The School Department's Director of Student Services, Steve Kaplan, has informed Supt. Edward Malvey that he will be leaving the Cohasset School system to take a position in the Lincoln-Hanscom School District.

"He has notified me verbally that he is in the process of accepting a position in the Lincoln-Hanscom school district," said Malvey. "Steve was not actively looking to leave Cohasset, but apparently as people refer people to other people, someone wanted to talk to Steve."

The resignation is not official as of yet, but it should be soon and Malvey said he expects that the departure will come some time in October.

"Steve Kaplan was knowledgeable and professional in his field of expertise."

— Supt. Edward Malvey

"I think it is going to be a tremendous loss for us," said Malvey. "Steve Kaplan was knowledgeable and professional in his field of expertise. In his several years here in the district he has assisted us in matters as we have come to grips with some tremendous deficits not too long ago and he steered us through the process of the special education audit of which we are still following up with. "

Malvey credited Kaplan with righting the special education program in the district, noting that he was responsible for creating the position of school psychologist. This year, thanks to his work, the school will have a school psychologist intern as well.

"He has put the special education program here onto the right track relative to the changes that came about in the statutes," said Malvey.

Taking community preservation to heart

$20 surcharge on all documents filed in the Recorder of Deeds Office, mostly mortgages and refinancing. Cohasset is one of 32 towns in Commonwealth that adopted the legislation at first opportunity, but over 50 towns will participate next year. It is estimated by the Community Preservation Coalition, which lobbied for the creation of the law, that the funds generated by the fees will be sufficient to fund a 100 percent match for the first three years the law is in existence. It also contains what Ivimey terms an "Anti-Raiding provision." The money can only be spent by the legislative body of a municipality under the recommendation of the town's Community Preservation Committee in accordance with the statute. It's not just another emergency slush fund.

"They've created this multi-million dollar funding without creating a political machine and bureaucracy to siphon off it," said Ivimey of the Act. "It doesn't have to go through the Town Manager, it doesn't have to go through the selectmen, I like to say it is completely outside of the ordinary political process."

Ivimey keeps a copy of the CPA – all four-inches thick of it – in a binder near his desk and consults it several times during the interview. The pages are marked and worn, with sticky notes protruding from the juiciest sections. He is probably one of the only people not directly involved in the writing of, or lobbying for, the bill that has read the entire thing.

But how did the Connecticut-native, Washington and Jefferson College grad (Pennsylvania), with law degree from the University of Denver and a tour of duty during the Gulf War end up in Cohasset, studying the CPA?

"I quit my job in Connecticut to follow my wife, being a man of the 90s." said Ivimey with a chuckle. "She lived in Boston, I lived in Hartford. There's not too much to talk about there."

It was his duty to find a house on the South Shore and he settled upon Cohasset, a decision he is grateful he made.

"I've met a lot of great people," said Ivimey. "I'm amazed at just how passionate a lot of people are about this town. Cohasset is not short of opinions on just about anything."

And that is one reason he fits in so well. He has a vision for the law and given that this is the Act's first year in existence, there is some leeway in terms of its interpretation.

"There's no case law on the subject, there aren't volumes written on it coming out of Harvard Law Review," said Ivimey. "It's brand new, and that is one of the difficulties and the exciting challenges about it, determining, whether a particular program would qualify under this."

That's not to say Ivimey and the rest of the nine-member board, which includes mandated representatives from the selectmen, historical commission, planning board, housing authority, and open space committees, are wielding the law recklessly.

"We go out to the people with the expertise and say, 'What is it that you have identified and what are your needs. What do you think is the most important thing for the town to do in your field?'" said Ivimey. "We're the financial partner, we're not the operating partner."

Grace period

The committee enjoys a five-year grace period, after being voted into existence by the town. After that point, the town could vote to disaffirm its participation in the CPA. Ivimey and the board are determined not to let that happen.

"It's important that the committee be active and spending our money in a way that is fiscally sound, giving the taxpayer value on the dollar," said Ivimey. "We need to be active in a way that does the greatest good for the greatest number so that we will be viewed as an organization that is a benefit to the town."

The committee is committed to investigating cost-effective ways to meet goals in the three areas covered by the statute, historical preservation, open space, and affordable housing.

For instance, the committee recommended $600,000, which was then approved by Town Meeting, towards the purchase of 13 acres off of Beach Street. The rest of the money was left to be raised through other means such as private donation by those who had brought the proposal forward. If the rest of the funding does not come through, the money is not lost. If it does, the commitment of funds by the CPC will require that the town own the land. The end result, the town purchases land for pennies on the dollar.

More recently, with the proposed acquisition of the Barnes Estate which abuts Wheelwright Park, the CPC has been involved in the purchase of land that may not even cost them anything. $500,000 of the $1 million total will come from the MBTA mitigation package, and another $100,000 from the Cohasset Conservation Trust, a private organization. The Conservation Trust has also pledged $150,000 in matching funds for private donations which could add another $300,000 to the coffers. If a state grant comes through, the CPC will have played a role in conservation without having to spend a dime.

Since the committee needs to spend at least 10 percent on each of the three divergent areas, there is often healthy debate.

"It's almost impossible to reconcile those three interests, so it is not a meeting of the minds, it's a meeting of the interests which are served by the committee, and those interests are competitive," said Ivimey. "Put it this way, it is impossible to find an antique building, where you can put low-to-moderate income housing, that has a big backyard."

But in many ways that is his, and the committee's charge. Find a way to preserve the community in the most effective way it can given the fact that land, preservation, and affordable housing are expensive.

It is a charge, though, that Ivimey takes seriously. He has adopted this piece of legislation personally, and in many ways it his baby. Just don't ask him about it unless you are prepared to know everything you ever wanted to know about the Community Preservation Act.

Community Preservation Act at a glance

· Cohasset is one of 32 towns that adopted the Community Preservation Act for this fiscal year.

· Funds from the CPA can be spent in three specific areas: open space, affordable housing, and historic preservation.

· Aside from minor administrative costs, the CPC does not spend money. The CPC only makes recommendations to the legislative authority in a town or municipality, (in Cohasset's case, Town Meeting).

· Each year, the CPC must spend or bank 10 percent of its annual revenue on each of the three specific areas.

· CPA funds are generated from two sources, a town real estate tax surcharge (in Cohasset 1.5 percent) and a some level of state match, determined from year-to-year. The state funds are derived from a $20 surcharge on all documents filed in the Recorder of Deeds Office statewide.

· The state contribution to a town's Community Preservation Fund takes place in three rounds. The first round takes 80 percent of the state's annual revenue raised pursuant to the CPA (through the funds raised at the Recorder of Deeds) and distributes that money as matching funds at the highest percentage possible across all the towns enrolled in the program. Cohasset does not qualify for the second two rounds, which require the town to have enacted a 3 percent real estate surcharge.

· According to the Community Preservation Coalition, which lobbied for the Act's creation, the level of state match should be 100 percent for the first three years of the Act's existence.

· The Department of Revenue, which oversees the state portion of funding can take up to 5 percent of the total amount raised on the state end for administrative costs.

I am sure many of you remember Denise and Gary Bismore, former owners of "The Silver Spoon". I had the pleasure of spending time with Denise this past weekend at South Shore Hospital and meeting their second son, Kyle! Kyle joins older brother Tyler at home and Denise looks fantastic and very happy start spending time being the mom of two. Congratulations to this fantastic family and we hope to have them come to town soon and let everyone get a peek at Kyle, he is a real cutie.

KATIE'S TEAM

On Sept. 29, Katie's Team will lace up their sneakers for the fourth year to participate in the Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk. Katie Egan, whose father Bob is Cohasset's Building Inspector, was diagnosed with Ewings Sarcoma in October of 1998. After a major operation and a year of chemotherapy, Katie is in her third year of remission and doing great!

The walk is a way for Bob and Ginny to give back something to the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute and the people who give care and hope to so many. Because of your generosity, Katie's Team has raised more than $47,000 over the past three years. They ask you again to join them in honoring the courage of the children and adults who are struggling with cancer and to honor the memory of those who have died. Please send checks made out to Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk to Bob at Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave, Cohasset MA, 02025. Thanks so much for your support.

PET PARADE

Mark your calendar and please note the correct date! The Farmers' Market second annual dog show and costume parade is Sept. 26 at 4 p.m. on the Town Common! Last week had the wrong date listed and we want to make sure that all stuffed, live and wonderful pet is ready for this fun and enjoyable day!

DESIGN SEMINAR BENEFIT

Christine Gritzan of Interiors By Decorating Den will be hosting a Design Seminar to benefit the Susan G. Komen Breast Cancer Foundation on Tuesday, Sept. 24 from 7-8:30 p.m. at St. Stephen's Parish, Cohasset. Christine, along with local muralist, Nancy Erving and Ralph Lauren representative, Louise Woodruff, will share their wealth of talent and experience in creating dramatic room transformations. Refreshments and Door Prizes will add to your enjoyment; and your $20 donation will aid in the fight against breast cancer. Reservations are required: 781-383-1611.

AQUARIUM TO VISIT

The Cohasset Center for Student Coastal Research (CCSCR) welcomes the New England Aquarium, Saturday, Sept. 28, starting at 11 a.m. for some hands on fun for all. This will give a glimpse to see what the center has to offer. In addition to the New England Aquarium visit one of our local lobsterman at his boat. Come listen about his day at "the office." The Cohasset Historical Society will be on hand to give a talk on the history of the former Hagerty House, Mariners Park area as well as a highlight of Cohasset harbor's rich history. On display you will see the worthwhile works of Cohasset students' field studies needed by our Board of Health, mandated by the EPA, such as fecal coliform, salinity and flushing studies of the harbor. Half the pollution entering our waterways is from surface water runoff which is being tested by student efforts. Lunch will be served from 11:30 a.m.-2:30 p.m.. Come appreciate a spectacular Fall afternoon on beautiful Cohasset harbor.

LOCAL SAILORS

Hobart College sailors junior John Pearce and sophomore John Storck, both of Cohasset, finished in the top four at the Navy Laser Open this weekend. Pearce finished second and Storck took home fourth place, earning both sailors a berth in the Mid-Atlantic Intercollegiate Sailing Association (MAISA) Singlehanded Championships, Oct. 12-13, at Navy.

Sophomore Wiley Wakeman, also of Cohasset narrowly missed joining his teammates at the MAISA Singlehanded Championships, finishing eighth, two spots away from the final qualifying position. Cohasset students finished with the following standings.

Fantastic job to all of you.

BOOSTERS BREAKFAST

The Cohasset Soccer Booster Club will hold its annual Pancake Breakfast on Sunday, Oct. 6 from 8 a.m. to noon. at the new Cohasset Middle High School cafeteria. Great food, lots of raffle prizes and, new this year, games for the children. Tickets are $5 per person and are available in advance from any Middle or High School soccer player or at the door. This is the Booster Club's main fundraiser so your ticket will help to support our high school soccer teams!

HOLLY HILL FARM TOUR

On Sunday, Sept. 29, from 1:30 - 3:30 p.m. there's a tour at Holly Hill Farm for local residents and their families interested in learning more about the farm that brings the community vegetables and flowers, both at the Farmers' Market and at the farm stand on 236 Jerusalem Road.

There will be guided walks about the historic farm buildings, the growing fields and the surrounding woods. Visitors will also learn about the farm's long history and organic farming. Jean White, who many know from visiting the farm's booth at the Cohasset Farmers' Market, will be one of the tour leaders as will new resident farm managers Kate Sullivan and Tim Ashton. Make sure to stop in with your family to see this wonderful farm.

DEAN'S LIST

Nicholas Mincolla of Cohasset made the dean's list for the spring 2002 semester at Franklin Pierce College in New Hampshire. A lot of hard work Nicholas, congratulations.

CHITTICK ART EXHIBIT

Skipjack's restaurant on Clarendon Street, Copley Square in Boston, is exhibiting watercolors of Cohasset artist JoAnne Chittick. The paintings, which feature Boston scenes, including the Swanboats, Trinity Church, and Beacon Hill townhouses, will be on display through the month of September. JoAnne is a gallery artist of the South Shore Art Center. Enjoy a delicious meal while you view the numerous paintings!

WALKING FOR CANCER RESEARCH

For the fifth year, Kim Canney of Cohasset will help raise funds for cancer research simply by walking. She plans to join thousands of others on Sept.29 for the Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk, which is expected to raise $4.5 million for cancer research at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. The Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk is the only event, other than the Boston Marathon itself, that is sanctioned to use the historic 26.2-mile route from Hopkinton to Boston. Walkers can choose different routes (26.2 miles from Hopkinton, 13.1 miles from Wellesley or they can join patients and families on a three-mile route that begins at Harvard Medical School on Longwood Avenue. All walkers finish at the Copley Square finish line. Participants can register with a team or as an individual and each participant must raise a minimum of $100. For more information about supporting a walker or joining the event, call 800-632-3562 or visit www.jimmyfund.org.

SAILING IN CALIFORNIA

Ashley Ulmer, a 2001 CHS graduate, spent 10 weeks in California this summer teaching sailing at the St. Francis Yacht Club in San Francisco and on Tinsley Island. She received her training in Cohasset Yacht Club's 5-year Flag Program, spent two years competing with the CYC Junior Racing Team, three years as an instructor at the Cohasset Sailing Club, and has been a member of the Williams College Sailing Team this past year. She is certified in Level I from U.S. Sailing, Red Cross Senior Lifesaving and CPR. Congratulations, Ashley — Cohasset missed you, but what a summer!

Please have all your news, events and photos to me no later than Mondays by noon!

Sale of Pratt town history to help fund annual award

Annual garage sale in Saturday

By Amanda Gontarz
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset Historical Society will sell the remainder of its collection of The Narrative History of the Town of Cohasset, Volume II, Saturday at the garage sale the society is holding at the Caleb Lothrop House at 14 Summer St.

Kathy O'Malley, co-president of the society, said the remaining volumes are being sold in order to raise funds for the annual Burtram Pratt Memorial Award the organization gives out to a graduating senior at Cohasset High School's Class Night.

In previous years, the award has been an inscribed volume of the book, which was written by Pratt, a former member of the society. O'Malley said that, starting this year, the society hopes to turn the award into a scholarship.

"We would like to be able to put some money with the award," O'Malley said.

For weeks now, the society, which boasts a membership of more than 500, has been collecting donated items for its second annual yard sale, being held from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m., with a rain date scheduled for Sunday from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. The sale will feature everything from books and knickknacks to old television sets and radios.

"We hope people will stop by and find a treasure," said Patricia Steel, who volunteered to organize the sale.

Steel, whose husband, John, just finished his second term as treasurer of the society, took on the project singlehandedly, O'Malley said. She has spent countless hours collecting, sorting and pricing the items.

It was at Steel's suggestion that the society held the first yard sale, which raised more than $2,200 last year.

"We hope to do better this year, or at least match that amount," Steel said.

Cohasset Historical Society member Martha Gjesteby sets up last year's garage sale while some children get a sneak peek at the items for sale.

The Caleb Lothrop House is in need of painting and repairs.

O'Malley, who shares her presidential duties with Paula Kozol, said that while last year's sale was successful, this year's event will feature many more items that she thinks will attract more customers.

The money raised from the sale will be put toward the repairs and maintenance of two of the society's buildings, the Lothrop House, the group's headquarters, and the Maritime Museum, located on Elm Street. The buildings need to be painted while O'Malley said ultraviolet protection must be put over the windows to help preserve the society's artifacts and collections. Included in those collections are more than 1,000 costumes and gowns that the society would like to put on display, either in their buildings or on loan to museums.

O'Malley also said that the displays in each of the society's buildings need to be upgraded.

"In old buildings, doing the upgrades appropriately is difficult," she said.

Residents who pass by the Captain John Wilson House, at the corner of Elm and North Main streets, may notice the giant fund-raising thermometer outside the building. Since November, the society has tracked the money donated for the preservation and maintenance of the Wilson House. Almost $33,000 has been donated, so far. Also, the society received a $150,000 grant from the Community Preservation Act. That money, however, was awarded solely for the restoration of the Wilson House and making both the Wilson House and Maritime Museum handicap accessible.

"It sounds like a lot of money, but the project is bigger than that," O'Malley said.

While physical repairs and upgrades are at the top of the society's goals, increasing membership is always a priority. Though there are more than 500 members, O'Malley said she would like to have a member from each family in Cohasset join the society.

"The more members an organization has, the more active its committees can be and the more it can do," she said.

Community outreach programs are something upon which the society would like to expand. O'Malley said she would like to see the society working with the local schools and senior citizens, as well as residents new to town.

The Historical Society is still accepting donations for Saturday's sale. If you have useable items (anything but clothing) that you would like to give, please contact Pat Steel at 383-2545.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Business as usual

Regardless of your feelings about restoration of the Greenbush Line, the short shrift given Article 97 of the state Constitution should give you pause.

So should the way the state Legislature handled the $400-million Transportation Bond Bill, which was rammed through during the wee hours of the morning on Aug. 1.

Article 97 protects conservation and parkland from development without first winning a two-thirds vote of both houses of the state Legislature.

Therefore, Hingham-based AfTA, an anti-Greenbush group, believes the Legislature must vote before the MBTA can take the town-owned Cohasset and Scituate railroad right-of-ways for restoration of the train. It filed a lawsuit to that effect, and had hoped the issue would have been aired in the light of day.

But that's not the way Beacon Hill does business. Bond bills are chockablock with goodies for the districts, making it difficult to find legislators with the courage to vote against them. The bills also contain attachments, and buried in this bill was a blanket authorization for MBTA land-takings, among other controversial matters.

Not one to mince words, state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, described the bond-bill scenario as a textbook example of "sleazy backroom politics." The bond bill passed the 40-member Senate, 36-1, with Sen. Hedlund as the lone nay.

The bill passed the 160-member House with a vote of 138-13. State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, who tried to strike the Greenbush language and voted against the bill, said only one copy of the mammoth bill was floating around for state representatives to look at prior to the vote. On the Senate side, Sen. Hedlund said he grabbed a copy of the bill from the copier, quickly perused the document that was still warm. Ten minutes later the bill was up for consideration.

Not only was MBTA land-taking issue in there, but the bond bill also did not provide a voice at the table for communities most affected by Logan and Hanscom air traffic, as was in the original version.

"This representation would have allowed communities, including Hingham, Hull, Cohasset and Weymouth to have a say in long-range planning of these facilities, and input concerning related capital expenditures," Sen. Hedlund said. "The advisory board has approved no such provisions, so communities that have been desperately striving for a voice in the process of the Logan expansion project have once again been shut out, their opinions of little concern to those who make transportation policy at the state level."

The bond bill also changed the makeup of the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority Board that weakens autonomy of the board by allowing two more members to be appointed by the governor; and authorized full funding from the state's general fund for construction of the Fall River-New Bedford Commuter Rail Line when the MBTA is supposed to be self-sufficient.

Sadly there is little accountability on Beacon Hill, and responsibility for that ultimately belongs to the voters.

The turnout at Tuesday's primary is indicative of an apathetic electorate that isn't paying attention.

John Bewick, head of AfTA, put it best. He warned that environmentalists should be concerned that the process without open hearings diminishes Article 97 protections of open space and conservation lands.

"Where will the next special interest strike?" he asks.

'Hiding the facts' on Avalon Cohasset

TO THE EDITOR:

I am compelled to provide some stark contrasts to all the positive comments about AvalonBay in last week's Mariner, as well as their presentation on Monday night at the ZBA hearing.

AvalonBay states that "...there will be a benefit to Cohasset." The only likely benefit is that Cohasset will supposedly have met its 40B obligations with one project. But the fact is that this project will only give us 40-51 affordable units for a limited time. This is far below the 10 percent state mandate and far less than we really need. And this is just simply not right. It shortchanges those who work here and cannot afford to live here, it short changes seniors who have lived here all their lives and are now forced to leave town because there are no affordable options. This is the biggest flaw in the law and the project. 40B shortchanges everyone it was designed to benefit: the town, those who need affordable housing, seniors and the citizens of Cohasset.

AvalonBay cannot be trusted to properly state the impacts of its projects. At several meetings and in previous discussions with the town, AvalonBay has stated that they expected to add "roughly 30 children" to the Cohasset school system. They also stated that they had approximately 80 children in a smaller (198 unit) project in Lexington. Both are gross understatements. A discussion with their own manager in Lexington and subsequent confirmation revealed that there are nearly 200 children in AvalonBay Lexington.

A highly rated school system like Cohasset will likely attract hundreds of new children to a system that is now designed to handle just 10 new families a year for 10 years (matching our current rate of growth). The AvalonBay project is likely to exceed that in its first year of operation. At the $7,000 per student that Cohasset invests in its students, this one project could cost the taxpayers of Cohasset millions per year in additional taces.

Every town AvalonBay tries to use for comparison is far larger than Cohasset and can absorb their large luxury apartment projects more easily. Cohasset cannot. The proposed AvalonBay Cohasset project is simply far too big for a community of 7000 to absorb. At this week's hearing they again tried to compare AvalonBay Wilmington to Cohasset, stating they added only 35 children there. And again an independent confirmation with their manager in Wilmington indicated approximately 100 children. The fact is Wilmington is three times the size of Cohasset and their school system is not comparable. Why do they continue to hide the facts?

And they have publicly stated that they do not do seniors only housing, nor would they consider a more appropriately scaled project half the size, nor would they entertain a mixed use project for the site that might also allow Cohasset to recoup lost commercial tax revenue. They have made it clear that they have successfully overcome resistance before and they will use the 40B law to ram this project through. Please join Cohasset Action in this effort to get the size and type of project that Cohasset residents and taxpayers truly need. It is the right thing to do. Putting politics aside on 9-11 anniversary

CRAIG SANDLER

Recap and analysis of the week in state government ending Sept. 13.

Once again last week, politics in Massachusetts stopped because community mattered more. Once again, leaders drew respect from understatement.

And as it was a year ago, the special cynicism reserved for politicians and journalists was suspended briefly, put aside as inappropriate, and again both groups generally responded with dignity. The main difference this year was that the shock was gone, but an irreversible ache had taken its place. At no time since last Sept. 11 had the longing for last Sept. 10 seemed so keen.

The names of the 166 Massachusetts victims were read in front of the State House – and no speeches or other words were added. Faneuil Hall, which has weathered its share of dark moments for freedom, once again was the scene of exhortations to have courage. Acting Gov. Jane Swift presented a medal for public sacrifice named for the late flight attendant Madeline Sweeney, and told the somber audience: "One infamous day will never outweigh the memories, the smiles and the spirit of our loved ones."

This was the anniversary of Swift's best moments as governor. When it comes down to it, the only really effective thing ordinary citizens can do to counter terrorism is refuse to be terrified. Swift seemed to grasp this point of leadership last Sept. 11 much better than she subsequently seemed to grasp many points of politics.

She told people they should fight tyranny by exercising democracy. She resisted a call from the secretary of state to postpone a primary for Congress in the Ninth District. She said that despite the strong sense that afternoon of the world ending, the people should get out and vote. She opened the government for business the next day. Her approval rating at the end of September hit 68 percent.

Swift's rising to her challenge was a small part of an unforgettable, horrible, noble few days that no one could help remembering last week. Polls showed more people were planning private, quiet commemorations than participation in public events. That means, as one radio commentator put it, that as the governor and senator and president and family members spoke and millions listened, millions more were conducting simultaneous hidden ceremonies, no less poignant than the ones on CNN.

And yet, by last Thursday afternoon, life and politics were up to their old tricks again. The primary is only four days away, and most candidates had only one day to spare. Gently but forcefully, they started their battles back up. Political ads, including the "comparison" kind, started running again. The House and Senate met; the education commissioner released the latest details on MCAS results.

Many Massachusetts lives were lost last year, and many survivors found their old lives ended. But for most of the political world and for most citizens, normal life, whatever that is, couldn't wait for long.

A return to normal these days means it's back to bad news. News from the treasurer's office was normal.

• Treasurer Shannon O'Brien's latest cash-position report, obtained by the News Service, shows the state is going to have to borrow $1.6 billion this year to keep up with its bills, despite last year's $1.2 billion tax hike and the use of more than $1 billion in cash reserves. Most members of the general public are probably unaware of just had bad fiscal affairs still are, even though citizens are well aware their taxes went up. Revenues continue to miss the benchmarks that continue to be lowered; the governor has warned of another $200 million in potential budget; legislative leaders have never amended their earlier statements that taxes may have to be raised yet again.

• Swift named Richard K. Anderson of Milford to the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority Board of Directors Thursday. Anderson joins John Moscardelli on the board, expanded from three to five members under this summer's transportation bond bill. With the choice, Swift appointees now control the turnpike board – though Christy Mihos and Jordan Levy are likely to continue the dissension and questioning that got them by fired by Swift, then reinstated by the courts. Mihos and Levy have been critical of Big Dig management; Anderson said he has yet to form a firm opinion about toll increases on the turnpike.

• A new United We Stand Massachusetts license plate commemorating the September 11 attacks was approved last week by the state Legislature during the final regularly-scheduled session before the anniversary. Lawmakers also approved a Red Sox license plate. If Acting Gov. Jane Swift signs the bill, both plates may be ready for sale in four to eight weeks; they'll cost $40.

Craig Sandler writes for the State House News Service.

Fond memories of Deer Hill School

A LINCOLN HILLSIDE LIFE

KATHLEEN O'DONNELL

Growing up in the Lincoln Hillside neighborhood in the 1960s meant Deer Hill School was an important part of our lives. One aspect of living away from Cohasset is when I return to visit I sometimes discover that exciting new developments are underway with which I am unfamiliar. Like many of my former classmates, distance and time has not diminished my love for my hometown.

On the day of my arrival last summer I passed by Deer Hill School and was surprised to see the extensive addition and refurbishment project that was well underway. I hadn't heard of the plans to improve and expand Deer Hill, and was impressed that so much progress had been made in what seemed like a short time.

I attended Deer Hill in the mid to late 1960s. Coming in from the airport a few months ago, I passed by its stone walls on Sohier Street and many faces flashed through my memory. Teachers and school support staff are a significant part of a child's life in those tender years of ages 8 – 12; Mrs. Murphy, Mrs. Daunt, Mrs. Mullen, Mrs. Truesdale, Miss Wenmark, Mrs. Kablotsky, Miss Ohl, Mr. Schultz, Mrs. Bleakney, Mrs. Tewskbury, Mr. Becker, Mrs. St. Onge, our nurse Mrs. Gormley, our secretary Miss Conte, Principal John Creamer, the benevolent Mrs. Russell, Mrs. Pratt, Mr. Kuntz, our librarian Mrs. Tower and the unforgettable Mrs. Rachel Lent.

I was fortunate enough to have Mrs. Lent as my third-grade teacher. By the time I became her pupil she had been teaching for many years, but her genuine affection for children and her determination to tame us into mathematicians and literate beings was undiminished. In her classroom we felt safe, valued and welcome. Her students were like a little family. 1965 was a very different time; I remember many in her class giving and receiving a morning hug as we trouped past her into our classroom. All those little arms encircled her neck and started the school day with a loving affirmation. If one of us had a new haircut, new shoes, a lost tooth, a new coat or family news, we looked forward to sharing it with Mrs. Lent the next morning. Her birthday was April 1st and I'm certain that I'm not the only one of her former students who still gives a passing thought to her memory on that date. As a class we read the Ernest & Bertha Cobb chapter books "Arlo," "Clematis" and "Andre," which were published in the 1930s and 1940s. These were simple and old-fashioned stories with exciting plots and strong moral messages. I still have copies of these books on my library shelf at home.

Mrs. Russell came to us once a week or so to teach us spelling, how to diagram a sentence and recognize nouns, verbs, prepositions, prepositional clauses, adverbs, articles and more. Fortunately it was decided that we weren't too young to begin learning these valuable tools. We had notebooks with five pages titled "Her First Nurse Works Early" and were expected to fill each column with examples of all the words we found during the school year with those blends. Mrs. Russell taught us all the handy tricks which we'd need to know to become good writers, like drop the "e" and add "ing" to the end of a word to give it action. The silent "K"s were a sneaky bunch and we were expected to memorize alphabetic lists of all the words in which they liked to appear so that they wouldn't sneak up and surprise us. We learned all the rules about "E"s which appeared at the end of a word, and which were denoted by a double line under it and the rule number. Mrs. Russell somehow packaged all this teaching into an entertaining format which made us view her visits as a pleasant break from what we considered real schoolwork. She was a gentle, warm and smiling woman who brought another positive dimension to our 1960s Deer Hill School experience.

The building which housed all those children, all that learning, all those memories, was a good and sound one.

Mr. Becker was our new teacher toward the end of my tenure at Deer Hill. 1968-69 was a year in which sixth-graders had Mr. Becker for science and more. The projects he assigned to us and his teaching methods were innovative. It was a presidential election year and we were expected to follow the campaigns of Richard Nixon, George Wallace, and Hubert Humphrey and cast our votes a few days before Election Day based on informed judgements of the three candidates. I think I missed the entire point of the "informed voting" exercise because I voted for Hubert Humphrey in our mock election. My reason?: I felt sorry for him because he was old. At the time he was 57 years old and only two years older than the winner of that race. Coincidentally, our student election poll accurately reflected the outcome of that race, with Richard Nixon winning the election in both our classroom and the country.

The academic year in Mr. Becker's science class was also the year of Apollo Missions 7, 8, 9 and 10. As part of our science requirement we were expected to build up a scrapbook of news clippings from each night's newspaper which would chronicle the development of the space program that year. By the end of the year each of us had compiled a valuable keepsake of an important piece of modern history. Unfortunately once again I missed the value of the exercise, and lost or discarded my space scrapbook some time after I graduated. As I grow older there are fewer and fewer books, papers, knick-knacks, and general stuff which I feel the need to keep. That space scrapbook is probably the single item of my Deer Hill years which I now wish I'd kept, so that I could share it with my children.

The building which housed all those children, all that learning, all those memories, was a good and sound one. Deer Hill School of the mid to late 1960s was light, spacious, well-designed, well-maintained by friendly and dedicated janitors and featured interior walls which were made of modern, pastel-coloured, highly glazed blocks. There was a central courtyard. We had an excellent and well-stocked library.

At our sixth-grade graduation ceremony in 1969, we sang "Happiness Is..." from the Charles Schulz musical "You're a Good Man Charlie Brown" which was in its second season on Broadway. We also sang "The Impossible Dream" from the 1965 Broadway hit "Man of La Mancha" (and also as I recall the theme from the 1967 Red Sox World Pennant race). I hoped that this last song was not a reflection of our teachers' thoughts on our future academic prospects! After six years of climbing our way to the top of the elementary school pile we would be moving on to CHS, to be returned to the bottom of the hierarchy, to begin working our way up through another six years. Like many of my sixth-grade graduating classmates, I was a Lincoln Hillside child, as were some of our parents before us. Many of us knew we would be taught by some of the same teachers under which our parents learned when they attended high school in Cohasset decades earlier.

I have good memories of my Deer Hill years. It is more than slightly concerning for me that I can easily remember the names and faces of almost all my teachers of 1966, but I can't recall the ages of my children when they first began to walk or speak in full sentences. This disturbing discrepancy is perhaps not something on which I should dwell too much. Perhaps my memory is designed to work perpetually backwards and in 20 years time I'll recall with ease the ages at which my children reached these milestones. My class left Deer Hill School looking forward to a new decade and new challenges at CHS. As a generation we had experienced the benefits of caring and committed teachers and almost equally important: a spacious, well-maintained and well-supported school building. I know that improving and expanding Deer Hill School is expensive and that the costs of this improvement won't affect my pocketbook, but I have to admit I'm pleased that this generation and future generations of Cohasset children will be receiving their Deer Hill School education, as I did, in a building for the future.

Kathleen O'Donnell, a CHS graduate, grew up in Cohasset and now lives and works in the UK with her family. Her reflections about growing up on Lincoln Hillside appear occasionally in the Cohasset Mariner.

Special interests and Greenbush

GREENBUSH VIEW

MARTHA REARDON BEWICK

Greenbush Question of the Week: What hasn't changed in 155 years?

Answer: Midnight legislation on Greenbush which favored special interests, and passed without hearings, without discussion, and without representation of the votes and concerns of the local communities. On April 30, 1847, in the middle of the last night of the legislative session, the legislature voted to override the Greenbush alignment which had been surveyed and designed by the South Shore communities.

The original alignment would have connected with Quincy Center, run along the coastline, and bypassed the village center of Hingham. Instead, in 1847, led by business interests of Boston, Cohasset and Weymouth, they legislated a new alignment, to begin somewhere in Braintree, and avoid the heads of navigation for the Weymouth Fore and Back Rivers. The business interests wanted to keep the navigational channels open in order to continue to pick up cheap lumber in Weymouth Landing.

This midnight override of the public interest led to an impassioned speech by Hingham's representation Jotham Lincoln, who became so distraught, that he was carried off to the Charlestown Hospital "furiously insane."

Some time after midnight on the last night of the legislative session, July 31,2002, the Massachusetts legislature voted to take 8.2 miles of vernal pools, and walking and hiking trails, part of the recreational fabric of Cohasset and Scituate, and owned by those towns. This is the old rail right-of-way, which was abandoned more than 40 years ago, and transferred to the towns. There were no hearings on this taking. There was no opportunity for voters to find out how much land was to be taken, and to raise a voice of concern for the wetlands, the endangered species, the biodiversity, and the recreational and bike trails. With no notice, this item was railroaded through by the legislature as part of the Transportation Bond Bill. Following the ordinary process, this taking of 8.2 miles of recreational and conservation land would have required posted hearings, and a two-thirds vote of the legislature. This was a Article 97 taking of constitutionally protected recreation land. (Where there were other midnight takings of Article 97 land, there was editorial opposition from regional newspapers.) The construction and land development business interests, who have been generous in their contributions to key legislators and statewide elected officials, want this Greenbush job to be built.

Helping kids make good decisions

Project Safeguard for Middle School students

On Tuesday, Oct. 8, seventh-grade students at Cohasset Middle School will participate in special program known as Cohasset Project Safeguard. What makes this program special is the fact that it attempts to involve the entire community in helping young people avoid making harmful decisions regarding the use and abuse of alcohol and drugs.

Alcohol and drug abuse is well recognized as a societal problem that has many contributing factors. The Project Safeguard Committee, comprised of educators, clergy, and parents, believes that the cooperation of the entire community is necessary if the drug and alcohol abuse problem is going to be effectively addressed. Project Safeguard will bring seventh-grade students and their parents together for a half-day of presentations and discussion designed to supplement school health education and guidance programs by encouraging students to make healthy choices and by providing support and guidance to parents in their effort to raise "drug-free" children. The Project is subsidized by the Parent-School Organization and community donations making it a true community effort.

This year's featured speaker is Ed Gerety. Gerety is one of America's top youth motivational speakers and leadership trainers. His inspirational, educational, and entertaining messages focus on respect, character, leadership, and personal responsibility.

The Project Safeguard Committee believes the cooperation of the entire community is necessary to effectively address the drug and alcohol abuse problem.

Students will also view and discuss the play "Jesse's Journal," an innovative health program for middle school students developed by The Women's Crisis Center of Newburyport. This presentation uses drama as an educational tool to address a variety of middle school issues including family and peer relationships, appearance and behavior, dating, gender issues, substance use and abuse, and social and academic stress. Cohasset Middle School and High School students will act out the play. In addition, there will be opportunities for small group discussions and interaction among the students and adults.

Parents of seventh-grade students, as well as other interested community members are invited and encouraged to attend. The program will utilize a "campus on the common" format beginning at the Cohasset Town Hall at 7:30 a.m.. and also making use of the Second Congregational Church and St. Stephen's Church. The program for students will be completed by 11:30 a.m. to be followed by a parent luncheon.

For more information, or to reserve a space, contact Dr. Michael Gill, Health Education Coordinator (781-383-4205) or community liaisons Sally Sisson (781-383-6190), Karen Oronte 383- 6737 or the Rev. Cliff Cutler (781-383- 1083).

Dress codes out of fashion

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

It seemed like a good idea at the time but so, they tell me, did prohibition.

It appears that the strict school uniform codes which were held out as a panacea in the 1990s for everything that is wrong with our public school systems have started to go the way of the McGuffy Readers.

In sunny California, where the school uniform craze was begun to reduce violence and distractions and promote equality a decade ago, at least 50 school districts have abandoned the idea.

Everybody thought it was a good idea when it started in Long Beach in 1994.

Gang colors, like those flaunted by the Crips and the Bloods, and provocative dress, like the low-cut denims and short blouses made famous by Britney Spear, were out.

Identical uniforms, worn by rich kids and poor, majority and minority, so that you couldn't tell the difference, replaced more casual clothing. For good measure, the school logo was added.

Everybody thought it was a good idea when it started in Long Beach in 1994.

There was some grumbling. Parents found they now had to supervise dress before they hurried off to work. Kids found they had to keep two separate wardrobes, one for school and one for the mall.

The schools relented. They took the logo off the uniforms. Then they proclaimed "casual Fridays" when the youngsters could wear what they wanted. Then they made the uniform code optional by waivers.

"Soon," said the New York Times the other day, "teachers were wasting the first 10 minutes of class trying to figure out who had waivers and who was breaking the rules."

"It became a huge distraction," said Beth Shedd, head of the math department at Sierra Vista Junior High School. "It increased friction, it increased discipline problems, having to worry about who was wearing what. It wasn't worth the fight." Sierra Vista gave up on uniforms.

(Has anyone explored the idea that the alleged sorry state of our public schools is caused by the fact that teachers are so often called on to break up fights, check dress codes and collect lunch money that they don't have time to teach? But I digress . . .)

School dress codes — but not uniforms — have led to some unusual ways of handling youngsters who are likely to come to school looking like hookers and pimps.

Old Mill High School in Millersville, Md., holds an annual fashion show for incoming freshmen and their parents in which upperclassmen model both appropriate and inappropriate dress from their own closets.

And every teacher at Old Mill High has a box of school T-shirts to distribute to those girls who show up with belly buttons showing and boys with inappropriate words and diagrams on their own shirts. Brophy Elementary School in Framingham has a simple test to determine if a student is wearing an acceptable shirt. He or she has to stand and raise his or her arms. If the student's midriff shows, it's back to the drawing board for a longer one.

And that's an elementary school!

POLITICAL NOTES

Cohasset GOP to meet Sept. 24

The Cohasset Republican Town Committee will hold its next meeting on Tuesday, Sept. 24 at the Lightkeeper's Cottage in Cohasset. All who would like to get involved volunteering for the upcoming November elections are invited to attend. For more information, please call Janet Fogarty 617-742-1221 or Lee Jenkins 781-383-0023.

Salute Republican candidates night

Norfolk, Plymouth, Barnstable, Bristol County GOP candidates and leaders will salute republican candidates Thursday, Sept. 26 at the John Carver Inn in Plymouth. Social hour is at 6 p.m. followed by dinner and meeting at 7 p.m.

The meeting is open to the public but reservations are required. To RSVP, call Larry Novak at 508-581-8400; Polly Logan at 781-383-0031; Chris Fava at 508-745-6239; or Tom Barry at 781-834-6763.

Another highlight of the meeting will be how to organize a drive for the absentee ballots and to work on telephone banks to insure all votes.

Bradley announces two new Web sites

State Rep. Garrett J. Bradley, D-Hingham, is announces that the Commonwealth's new Web site is up and running. The Mass.Gov Web site (www.mass.gov) is a customer-centric portal organized around customer needs, not state agencies. The tag line "Your Government, Your Way," featured on the sites homepage, conveys the goal of the portal: to provide flexible, intuitive access to government services at the customer's convenience.

"It is important that taxpayers have easy access to agencies they fund," said Bradley.

Bradley also announces a tracking Web site for planes arriving and departing from Logan Airport. This will enable his constituents of the Third Plymouth district to actually see how many planes travel through the district and how frequently they fly over our homes. The Massport web address for tracking the planes is: (www.massport.com/logan/airpo_noise_airmo.html).

"This Web site will allow all of us to see how over burdened the airspace of this district already is," Bradley said.

Bradley, Palmer head for Nov. 5 finish

(This is the first of the series of the Mariner's coverage of the Third Plymouth District Race)

If you are a politician, you've got to like primaries like this one.

In the Third Plymouth District both Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham and Cohasset Republican Nathaniel Palmer ran unopposed. Bradley received votes from 696 of the Democratic voters with one ballot left blank and Palmer received 577 votes from Republican voters with 3 ballots left blank.

But the next ballot, which pits Bradley and Palmer against each other in the general election which is less than six weeks away, promises to be much more hotly contested.

Palmer, 32, who is co-owner of the Delphi Group, a consulting firm that focuses on growth strategies for high-tech companies, thinks is business expertise is something the Legislature desperately needs. Palmer, a relative political newcomer, is also a member of the Cohasset Republican Town Committee and served on the Housing Authority in Milton before moving to the South Shore.

Garrett Bradley

Palmer expects a tough race against Bradley, a seasoned campaigner, who can raise a lot of money.

Bradley, also 32, an attorney and a former Plymouth County prosecutor, faced challenges from Josh Cutler and Walter Murray, both of Hull, in the Democratic primary during his first try for the Third Plymouth District seat four years ago. He won the primary but lost to long-time incumbent Republican Mary Jeanette Murray of Cohasset in the general election. Two years ago, Bradley beat Democrat Michael Holden of Hingham in the primary, and Republican Mary Anne McKenna of Hingham and Walter Murray, in the general election.

"For me as a challenger, the race began back in March or April when we turned in the signatures," said Palmer, a Cohasset resident. "For the incumbent, the race typically gets more serious following the primary."

According to Bradley, though, the race began for him during the last election cycle.

"I think my race started two years ago when I got elected," said Bradley, who lives in Hingham. "This has been a two-year race for me. I believe that I have delivered on my promise to be a strong independent voice for the district."

Palmer said he was driven to join the race by what he perceived to be a "gross imbalance up on Beacon Hill."

"We've seen so many symptoms or manifestations of that in the past couple of years," said Palmer. "There are more Democrats than Republicans, and with the ratio being so skewered, the power basically falls into the hands of one person. Everything is done in committee, without visibility."

Bradley, though, believes that he is not a participant in that balance, providing, "strong, independent leadership" for the district.

"One representative can have an impact," said Bradley. "You can make a difference and stand up and fight the leadership and vote the way your district wants."

The district, which currently consists of Hingham, Hull, and Cohasset will have one precinct from Scituate added to it come Jan. 1., due to redistricting.

Highland Ave. hosts primary politicking

Palmer (state representative), along with other Republicans, state incumbent Sen. Robert Hedlund and the Romney-Healey team at the top of the ballot. (Herzfelder was a big local favorite beating Republican Daniel Grabauskas 607-100. But Grabauskas had the edge statewide and will face Democrat Timothy P. Cahill in the Nov. 5 general election.)

On the Democratic side, activists for state Rep. Garrett Bradley, gubernatorial candidate Shannon O'Brien, Mark Tobin for Register of Probate, and state Senate candidate Ted LeClair, among others, weren't in short supply.

The turnout beat expectations as 1,606 or about 32 percent of the town's registered voters cast ballots by the time the polls closed at 8 p.m. Tuesday.

Town Clerk Marion Douglas said voting activity was "steady" all day. For complete results, see page 12.

Most of the campaign workers had taken a day off from work for the "standout" that involved holding signs, waving to passersby, and chatting with each other.

"Participatory democracy is a wonderful thing," said Martin Corry of Pleasant Street, campaigning for Tobin.

Gail Collins proudly held an O'Brien sign.

"I'm happy to spend time supporting a woman with depth of experience," she said.

Dick and Lorna Larracey of Hingham have supported Bradley since 1998 when he first ran for state representative.

"We adore him and his family," Dick Larracey said. "We adopted them back in 1998."

Barbara Dillon was standing at the corner of Jason Road and North Main Street with a Palmer sign.

"He's my neighbor," she said. "I'm not really involved in politics, but I believe in this guy."

State senate candidate LeClair was making the rounds about 4 p.m. along Highland Avenue where he got embroiled in discussion on the problems with Chapter 40B with Roger Hill, a member of Cohasset Action, a group opposed to the AvalonBay 40B project in Cohasset. Chapter 40B is the controversial state affordable housing law and Cohasset Action members distributed literature on the issue outside the polls all day.

LeClair said he was discouraged by the low turnout statewide and expected after 9-11 more people would think voting was important.

"There are good spirited candidates in both parties," he said. "They put a lot into it."

OBITUARIES

Marie Alice Feola

Marie Alice (Dyson) Feola, 81, of Bonita Springs, Fla. and Lakeland, formerly of Cohasset, a homemaker, died Sept. 10, 2002, in Lakeland.

She enjoyed cooking, sewing and collecting plates and knick-knacks.

Mrs. Feola was born and educated in Weymouth, and had lived in Bonita Springs for many years and in Lakeland for a brief time.

She was the wife of the late Randolph A. Feola, who was the Cohasset Police Chief from 1967 to 1980. He died in 1999.

Mrs. Feola leaves two sons, Randolph A. Feola Jr. of Old Towne, Fla., and Ralph Feola of Lakeland; two daughters, Ruthanne Semel of Palmdale, Calif., and Suzanne M. Ross of Cohasset; two sisters, Anna Seely of Weymouth and Frances Desmond of Braintree; two grandchildren; and many nieces and nephews.

A funeral Mass was celebrated in St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset. Interment was in Woodside Cemetery in Cohasset.

The McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset, handled the arrangements.

Donations may be made to the American Cancer Society, 30 Speen St., Framingham 01701.

Arnold A. Brandt

Arnold A. Brandt, 85, of Cohasset, a former chief engineer in the Merchant Marines, died Sept. 10, 2002 at Quincy Medical Center from complications of Alzheimer's disease.

Born in Boston, Mr. Brandt joined the Merchant Marines as a young man and traveled the world. He worked his way up from ship hand to chief engineer.

He was a member of the Halifax Golf Club and the Pembroke Country Club.

Husband of the late Helen (Wallace) Brandt, he leaves his son, John Brandt; his three daughters, Eleanor Brown, Jessica Grace and Andrea Davis Lawson; three brothers, Roland, Earl and Chet Brandt; a sister, Dorothy Doyle; and several grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

A memorial service was held at the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home in Cohasset. Interment was in Beechwood Cemetery, Cohasset.

Memorial donations may be made to charity.

Mildred Stoddard Salyards

Mildred Stoddard Salyards, 79, of Cohasset, a retired employee of the Cohasset Public Schools, died at home on Aug. 29, 2002 following a long illness.

Mrs. Salyards worked 25 years in food service for the Cohasset schools system, retiring in 1989.

Wife of the late James R. Salyards, she leaves her two sons, James R. Salyards, Jr. of Exeter, N.H. and Russell D. Salyards of Santa Cruz, Calif.; her daughter, Joyce N. Salyards of Cohasset; two brothers, Sheldon and David Stoddard; her four sisters, Nellie Stoddard, Lillian Lincoln, Olive Morris and Hannah Sawyers; her eight grandchildren and six great-grandchildren.

A graveside memorial service was held at Beechwood Cemetery, Cohasset.

Funeral arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home of Cohasset.

Donations may be made in Mrs. Salyards' memory to the Hospice of the South Shore, 100 Bay State Drive, Braintree 02184.

Guy C. Tringali

Guy Charles Tringali, 47, of North Weymouth died at home on Aug. 27, 2002.

Born, raised and educated in Boston, Mr. Tringali was a Cohasset resident for 25 years.

He was a member of the Atlantic Club House in Quincy for 20 years and enjoyed music, movies, astronomy and the outdoors, and had a particular interest in meteorology.

He leaves his mother, Helen (Irving) Murley of Cohasset; his two brothers, Joseph of Bartlett, N.H. and Henry of Randolph; his sister, April Chantler of England; two nephews and two nieces.

Funeral services and interment were private.

Funeral arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home of Cohasset

Donations may be made in his memory to the Atlantic Club House, 338 Washington St., Quincy 02169.

Dorothy M. Flynn

Dorothy M. (Quilty) Flynn, 80, of Cohasset died Sept. 13, 2002 of a stroke at her daughter's home.

Born in Newton, she had lived in Cohasset for 48 years. She was a graduate of Mount Alvernia Academy and Lasell College in Newton.

Mrs. Flynn hosted several teas for John F. Kennedy during his 1960 presidential campaign.

She was a stewardess for American Airlines in Boston and worked several years as a model for the Hart Modeling Agency in Boston. She also worked for The Talbots in Hingham as a saleswoman and as a hostess at PJs Country House on Route 3A in Scituate.

She was a communicant of St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset.

Wife of the late Peter L. Flynn, Jr., she leaves her daughter, Doreen T. Trahon of Cohasset; her son, Peter L. Flynn III of Newton; three sisters, Audrey Keenan of Centerville, Rosemary "Rosebud" Martin of Cotuit, and Paulina Connolly of Hyannisport; her five grandchildren; and 18 nieces and nephews.

A funeral Mass was celebrated Sept. 17 at St. Anthony's Church by the Rev. Joseph C. Gengras, a family friend. Interment was in Woodside Cemetery, Cohasset.

Funeral arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home of Cohasset.

Donations may be made in Dorothy's memory to either the Friends of the Unborn, P.O. Box 692246, Quincy 02269; or to the Champions for Children, c/o Children's Hospital Trust, 138 Harvard St., Brookline 02446.

Radio station owner says rights were violated

Questions practice during incident at Hanover Mall

By Ed Baker
EBAKER@CNC.COM

WATD station manager Edward Perry is charging a Hanover Mall security officer with obstructing his attempt to gather information on a possible carjacking in the mall parking lot on Sept. 9 .

Perry, 61, was arrested by police after a security officer charged him with trespassing. He faces a pre-trial hearing in Hingham District Court on Oct. 18 to answer charges of being a disorderly person, interfering with a police investigation and resisting arrest. Perry has owned the Marshfield-based station for nearly 25 years.

Perry said he went to the mall to get details about an alleged carjacking that reportedly occurred at approximately 5:30 p.m. He heard a description about the incident from a police scanner in the studio newsroom. The report was later determined to be an attempted theft of a 1990 Buick LeSabre by a unidentified white male near the Ames department store. The car owner was slightly injured when the suspect struck him while driving away from the shopping complex.

"The suspect drove the car through the mall parking lot and struck the owner and caused a superficial laceration on his hand," said Lt. Walter Sweeney. The owner was not identified by Sweeney for privacy considerations

Police also recovered a 1991 Chevy Caprice in the mall parking lot that was stolen hours earlier from Kohls department store in Pembroke. Sweeney said its possible this car was stolen by the suspect that drove away in the Buick.

Perry said his rights to gather information for a news story were breached when a security officer prevented him from asking questions to witnesses at the scene. "I got of my car and parked it," said Perry. "A mall security guy came running toward me and said 'get off the property. You are trespassing.' I said I'm here to gather information."

Perry said the mall officer continued to insist that he leave the property. "I then turned on my mike and tape and asked him if he would tell me for the record why I should get off the property," said Perry. "He then said 'I'm not going to talk into that mike.' " He said he repeated his question at least several times to the mall officer.

Perry said the security officer then grabbed his microphone and tape. A small scuffle occurred between them. "A cop at the scene then told me it's illegal for me to record him without his (mall officer's) permission," said Perry. "He then said 'this man told you to leave.' I said I would not leave without my tape and they arrested me."

Police Chief Paul R. Hayes said he could not say much about the incident because it's in litigation. "There appears to be a conflict on priority," said Hayes. "His job is to report and we have to investigate. He has his opinion on how he should be doing his job, but that is what the court will decide. The mall is private property."

Perry said his Constitutional rights were violated and that his audio tape was erased by someone shortly after being arrested. "I have my own theories about who did it but it remains to be seen," said Perry without elaborating. "The recorder was in my car in the parking lot when I came back to the mall to get my car after being released, but it (recording tape) was erased."

He said the tape erasure is troubling from a public-interest standpoint. "It's troubling from a Constitutional perspective," added Perry. "To have this kind of thing happen is clear that there are some self interest here. This was a public area where the trouble happened. The safety of the people who use that area was affected. I think it shows a blatant disregard for the public interest,.."

Mall marketing director Lisa Mazzotta said the mall's management always accommodates news reporters seeking information. "We would never turn away a reporter whenever we have an incident," said Mazzotta. "We are always available. I don't know what transpired between him and the Hanover police."

A whale of a comeback

Two fourth quarter TDs lift Skippers past Nantucket

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset football Skippers might not be up to their Super Bowl playoff form of a year ago yet, but they did pull together for a opening week 19-12 win in Nantucket.

"For a first game, we played well," noted head coach Tony Rolfe, whose team has won the season opener in all five of his years in Cohasset. "Had we done what we were supposed to, though, we could have shut them out."

It is not surprising that Rolfe expects such big things from his defense, which held six opponents under 10 points last year.

The defense did make big stands when it was needed to on Saturday, cutting down the Whalers offense the entire fourth quarter. Senior Chris McKenna and Cosimo Cambi had exceptional games on defense for Cohasset, according to Rolfe, as the Skippers managed to control the line of scrimmage for most of the game.

Cohasset held the field position advantage during the first quarter, but neither team sustained any lengthy drives. The Skippers squandered both of their potential scoring opportunities with turnovers, a Braun Goodson fumble and a Mike Snowdale interception. Nantucket finally capitalized on the mistakes of their young visitors, mounting a scoring drive early in the second quarter, capped by an eight yard pass play for a touchdown.

The Skippers came right back on the ensuing possession to march deep into Nantucket territory with a balanced attack of run and pass plays. McKenna, formerly a defensive specialist who has recently become part of the team's goal-line package, muscled in a two-yard run for a touchdown to tie the game 6-6 before halftime.

The Whalers struck again late in the third quarter, riding their large offensive line to a running touchdown from inside the Skippers red zone. After a failed extra point attempt, the home team held a 12-6 lead into the final quarter.

"We kept our composure very well," lauded Rolfe, pleased that some his younger players did not collapse after falling behind late in the game. "In that respect, we played an outstanding game."

On Cohasset's first drive in the fourth, senior Snowdale began showing why he was the league's best passer in 2001, connecting to receivers John Durkin, Chris Bilodeau, and Tom Anderson. Snowdale tied the game when he hit Anderson from 15 yards for a touchdown. The Boston Globe credited Snowdale with 120 passing

Boys learn hard lesson

Cohasset booters bounce back after sloppy effort in Mashpee

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

"Obviously, I would have preferred a win, but I think this tie reinforced what we need to be doing."
Cohasset boys soccer coach Dave Nigro

Sometimes non-wins can be a coach's best friend.

Coming off a huge 2-1 upset over purported South Shore League powerhouse Norwell in the season opener Tuesday, the members of the Cohasset boys soccer team may, according to head coach Dave Nigro, have spent a little bit too much time reading their own press clippings.

And this situation wasn't helped by the first half of game number two on the season in Mashpee Thursday. The Skippers got out to a 2-1 lead on tallies by Chris Clark and John Andrade, and their collective surging confidence grew unfettered, as they controlled play against their SSL rival Falcons and had several opportunities in the first 40 minutes to blow the game open. Even the one lapse, a defensive breakdown that led to Mashpee's goal, did not seem to concern the kids much.

Nigro, who coaches soccer year round at the Club level, probably wasn't all that surprised by what happened in the second half.

"We had a bunch of guys who thought they could put on dribbling clinics rather than sticking to our game plan, and it cost us," he noted. "We played the style of game Mashpee wanted us to play rather than playing the kind of game we need to play to be successful."

The cost was a win. Rather than going to 2-0 in SSL play, the Skippers could manage only a tie, 3-3.

After Mashpee knotted the score at 2-2, Andrade scored Field hockey squad opens season with three straight one goal games

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

The first three games of the Cohasset field hockey season had plenty of excitement. However, the scores of the final three games got into a bit of a rut.

The first game was, 2-1. The second game was, 2-1. Guess what? The third game was, 2-1.

There was just a slight change in the way those scores were reported, though. Cohasset beat East Bridgewater in the season opener, but Hanover and Sandwich turned the other two games around.

"We played a couple of very tough games," said coach Deb Bostwick. "One of the teams, Sandwich, was a Div. 1 team. However, we're happy to play the tough ones. The kids get some good competition and the games help us improve just that much more as the season moves along."

Cohasset started out with the first goal of the season, blanking East Bridgewater, 1-0 in the first half. Danielle Pinkus scored goal number two for Cohasset and East Bridgewater picked up a point in a mismatch.

"We got some excellent play from the kids," declared the coach. "Junior Kaitlin Condon did a nice job at goal along with some good play from captain Sarah Dennis and captain Heather Peraino.

"The Cohasset team was outstanding. We lost five seniors

Taking a bite out of Bulldogs

Lady booters improve to 2-2 with win over Holbrook

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Jen Buckley finished her terrific day by scoring a pretty line-drive shot from 15 yards out, completing her first career hat trick.

Over the past few years, the Cohasset and Holbrook girls soccer teams have met for a handful of very close and competitive games, almost always ending in a tie or a one-goal decision. But this past Tuesday at Alumni Field, the Lady Skippers were clearly the superior team, knocking out the Bulldogs, 5-1, in their visitors' season opener.

"We have played very competitively with Cohasset," noted Holbrook coach Sharon Farell, whose team was originally scheduled to open with Westport last Friday, but that school dropped its varsity program this fall. "Everything is still pretty rusty."

Holbrook actually held the ball-control advantage for the opening minutes of the game, but the Skipper defense managed to thwart every attack by forwards Megan Piasecki and Amy Breen. Although the Cohasset defenders and midfielders could clear the ball past the center-line for potential breakaways, Holbrook effectively pulled their defense way up. This strategy forced the Lady Skippers into seven offsides infractions in the first half alone, totaling 10 in the game.

"I was happy with how we played," reported Cohasset coach Deb Beal, in her fifth year. "(Holbrook) is tough because they play that trap."

Finally, a looping through-ball off the foot of senior Maura McKenney was timed perfectly by speedy junior Jen Buckley. Buckley controlled the pass and, standing alone with all the defenders caught retreating, popped it over the head of Holbrook keeper Shauna Sullivan for a 1-0 lead.

Cohasset appeared to be building up serious momentum, as Buckley hit the crossbar and senior attacker Molly Flanagan hit the post within two minutes of the goal. But the Lady Bulldgos used their quick wingers to advance the ball and force a free kick off a tripping call.

Senior defender Jessie MacNeil set up the indirect kick to the weak-side where Breen tapped the ball to Piasecki. The freshman, playing in her first varsity game, scored the equalizer, sneaking the ball past Cohasset's Kelly Holway.

"[Piasecki] had a good game today," lauded Farell, who watched her frosh blossom as a junior varsity eighth grader a year ago. "And Jessie [MacNeil], we just love her. She's unbelievable."

who missed the game for a school trip, plus a goalie. Four juniors stepped up and did an excellent job."

Also doing a fine job for Cohasset were Kristen Howard and Deanna Brown.

Cohasset and Hanover played scoreless hockey up to the final moment of the first half when Hanover moved ahead with a score.

Hanover added a second goal in the second half and Cohasset closed the gap by one goal with a score by Courtney Caron. Cohasset later scored a second goal, but it was called back.

The Cohasset girls gave a good accounting of themselves in the opening eight minutes of the Sandwich game, but could not punch one home. At the nine minute mark, Sandwich was awarded a free hit and cashed in to take a 1-0 lead. Sandwich added a second goal before the end of the first half.

Cohasset played strong over the last 15 minutes. Senior Kim Ulmer scored a goal, but a potential tying goal off a free hit was waved off.

"The kids came up with a couple of great corners, that just couldn't make it in," declared the coach, "but they just kept on fighting."

Coach Bostwick singled out a number of Cohasset players for their efforts, including Frannie Noble, Pinkus, Brown and Sarah Genovese, who was sensational in goal, turning back 19 of 21 shots.

Cohasset was scheduled to play perennial powerhouse Hingham, yesterday, in non-league action.

Welcome to Mannyworld

EXTRA POINTS

MIKE SPELLMAN

I got to thinking the other day about the time I caught my then three year old son (now 11) taking crayons to the Living Room wall.

Obviously, I was aggravated. Obviously, I chastised him, but even before I got into the heart of the lecture, the frustration had abated. He was just a kid, after all; he didn't know what he was doing was wrong.

This trip down memory lane was prompted, not so oddly, by the recent tour de force week of Manny Ramirez. You see, I have come to the conclusion that Manny, in terms of social refinement and interpersonal maturity, is stuck somewhere between where my son was eight years ago and where he is now. This would certainly seem the most logical explanation for what we've seen in recent days. No one wants to be a pariah, after all.

It would thus follow Manny simply does not realize there's anything wrong with doing an about face in her batter's box when he hits a comebacker to the mound, or laughing and joking in the runway while teammates are standing respectfully at the top step of the dugout during the Sept. 11 ceremonies or completely ignoring the Police Officer that accompanied him out the field during introductions for that game.

Manny is, in a word, oblivious to everything that does not have to do with what he likes to do: hit the ball hard and occasionally push it to make a play in the field. We've heard this before, and laughed – an obvious exaggeration, right? Well, actually, as difficult as that might be to believe, no. That pretty much nails it.

We're guessing that Manny, for whatever biological or environmental phenomena, possesses an eensy weensy scope with which to view the world around him. Fortunately, he stumbled in to baseball at an early age, so this acute case of tunnel vision has not been a major problem in his life. In fact, it no doubt served him well in many regards. Blinded to the distractions every day life seems to rain on the rest of us, he was able to concentrate solely on the most difficult of all athletic feats: hitting the round ball with the round bat square.

Up through high school and minor league ball, and then finally with Indians, Manny had people shielding him, protecting him from that ever-troublesome reality. He could hit a ball better than anyone else, after all. Those around him adopted the "If it ain't broke, don't mess with it" position.

However, now Manny is playing baseball in Boston, where, as so many players have discovered before him, there is no way to hide. Here, the media and fans compete to see who can find their players' Achilles' heels faster, and both forces are relentless.

Well, we found it, and the situation has now reached the point where something is going to have to give.

A trade is out of the question. The eight year-$160 million contract makes Manny virtually untradeable in this day and age. Clearly, the Sox would never get equal value for the player who might just be the best overall hitter in the game.

Another possible remedy would be Boston fans becoming more understanding or even (tee hee) tolerant. Damn!...almost made it through that flight of fancy without laughing.

The only remaining option is that Manny is himself going to have to change, at least in appearance. And that's what brings me full circle to the anecdote involving my three year old. Although I stopped being angry with him for augmenting our wallpaper design, I still lectured him. He didn't know what he was doing was bad, but that's how he learned.

Working in our favor here is the fact that Grady Little and Mike Port both have kids. They know how this needs to work. Maybe next time Manny doesn't run out a ground ball, they should take away his home perm kit. Or how's about the next time he behaves in a sociopathic manner while in uniform, they put him in a hotel room that doesn't have the Cartoon Network. But these are just suggestions.

Bottom line: this shouldn't be too hard. My son, taste in music aside, is a perfect gentleman today.

If Manny was going to reveal his true nature in all its splendor, at least he chose an opportune time. At the time of this writing, it was difficult to find anyone who even knew how many games the Red Sox won in the three game weekend set with Baltimore (by the by, I checked: it was one of three against the team that had won just once previous to this in its last 20 games.)

You'd think Manny would send the Patriots a box of candies or something for yanking virtually all attention from him...but perhaps we're assuming a lot to think he's even noticed the change.

A few more random and irrepressible musings on the Patriots:

Could these first two weeks have been any better for Our Defending Super Bowl Champs? Two insulting underdog designations, two blow out wins against bitter rivals.

Might I suggest the Steelers change their rallying cry from "Sometimes the best team doesn't win" to "at least we didn't get smacked around as bad as the Jets."

The best thing about these whoopings on the detestable Steelers and Jets is they just keep giving. The Patriots game films are being used as "how to" manuals for opposing teams.

I think the genius labeling might be a little overdone, but there's no denying the way Belichick and staff have been able to unearth and exploit opposing weaknesses on a near unprecedented scale. Just as the Steelers fell big again this week to the Raiders, you can probably bank on the Jets taking it on the chin this coming Sunday down in Miami (not that the scarily improved Dolphins should need all that much help).

Does anyone think it's honestly a coincidence the Rams are 0-2? The Patriots Super Bowl tape was reportedly one of the most widely sold NFL Films ever. We're guessing there are one or two real grainy copies of this video in the offices of Mike Shanahan and Jim Fassell.

Though I remain both a Drew Bledsoe fan and believer, after watching Brady and Drew in successive games this past Sunday, I will now state without reservation that Belichick absolutely made the right decision on which QB to keep, and I say this without consideration of financial matters. The stats tell us Bledsoe had a great game. Common sense and knowledge of the game tell us Brady had an even better game.

Circle Oct. 6 on your calendars. That's when the Patriots travel to Miami to take on the Dolphins. This game, in addition to providing the winner with a big early lift in the AFC-East title race, could reveal much to those trying to get a handle on who should be considered the favorite to represent the Conference in the Super Bowl.

Cohasset's Tim Pilczak follows through on putt in match action against Abington last week at Strawberry Valley Golf Course.

Golfers fall to Harwich

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset golf team fell to 0-3 on Tuesday with a lopsided loss to SSL power Harwich, a team that dismantled six time defending league champion Norwell on Monday, 38-16.

The match was held at Harwich High's home Cranberry Valley course. The only Cohasset player to win his head-to-head battle was number five player Rob Lehr, whose 48 earned him the 5-4 edge over his counterpart. Senior Pat Reardon shot a team best 44 against Harwich's top golfer.

Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney — who saw his team fall in its previous two matches to league rivals Norwell and Abington — not surprisingly, had little to say after this match.

"Harwich is a very good team, and they're especially tough at home," said Sweeney, who is in his third season of coaching the golf team. "Hopefully, we'll give a little better accounting of ourselves when we get them up here (at Cohasset Country Club) later in the season (Sept. 30)."

The Clippers loss to Abington last Thursday at Strawberry Valley was by the score of 31.5-22.5. Cohasset senior Pat Reardon shot a strong nine-hole round of 36, while teammate Mike Hajjar earned points with his score of 38.

Abington's Al Redman was the medalist, shooting an excellent round of 32, while teammate Bill Carey matched Reardon's 36 for second best overall score.

yards for the game, but Rolfe believed that to be way low.

The Skipper defense then stifled the Whalers, forcing a three-and-out on their next two possessions, as Cohasset won back the battle for field position. Goodson, a senior starting his first game as at tailback, atoned for his first-half miscue and powered in a 25 yard touchdown run.

Rolfe credited his new offensive line — which features one senior in Cosimo Cambi, two juniors, Dan Tarpey and Steve Davis, sophomore Matt Casey and freshman Nick Arment — for the score.

"They made very few mistakes," reported Rolfe. "Braun was not at 100 percent (physically) this game, but they did a very good job."

Next up for Cohasset is Arlington Catholic, a non-league opponent who the Skippers trounced by nearly thirty points last year. However, according to Rolfe, who scouted AC's big win over Shawsheen last Friday night, this looks like a very different team this year.

Cohasset has opened their season with three straight non-league wins in each of the past three years. The Skippers are also now three-for-three in their annual meetings clashes with Nantucket.

Junior high boys lax league starts at Hanover YMCA

A first-of-its-kind regional lacrosse program for middle-school and junior high boys will be launched this September by Cohasset High varsity boys' coach Kevin Orcutt.

The program, to be held Sundays at the Hanover YMCA complex at Mill Pond, will be open to any South Shore player interested in improving both his individual and team skills, said Orcutt.

"Eventually, we plan to develop this as a group that will enter age-appropriate tournaments during the off-seasons and in summer," said Orcutt, who coached Cohasset to the state finals in 2001 and the quarterfinals last spring, and led a pair of Bay State Games gold-medal winning teams in 2001 and 2002.

The program – which will be called Hawks Lacrosse – begins on Sunday, September 15. It will run as a 10-week session this fall.

The program will go from 9 am until 11 am each Sunday. The total program cost will be $90 per player. Players will be expected to bring their own equipment, including stick, helmet, gloves and shoulder pads.

Players and their parents who would like to pre-register for the program can do so by calling Coach Orcutt at either 781-837-7764 or 617-827-4160, or by e-mail at kocoach4@aol.com. Registration forms will be available at the Hanover Mill Pond YMCA on Sunday, September 15 at 9 a.m.

"Whether you're someone who's learning the game, or someone who's got a lot of experience," said Orcutt, "this is a program that's going to make you a better, stronger player."

his second goal of the game to give the visitors back their one goal edge. However, Mashpee punched goal number three past keeper Curt Kahn to tie the game at 3-3 near the 75 minute mark, and that was how it ended.

"Once players start playing an individual game, a lot of the parts of the game start going flat," noted Nigro. "We had too many guys standing around and watching, and our defense kind of flattened out. Mashpee was a counterattack team that looked to send guys through on goal quick, and they managed to hit us a few times when we weren't ready."

Nigro was probably able to slam this point home harder when the same Norwell team his squad had beaten just seven days earlier dominated Mashpee this past Tuesday, 4-0, coach Jack Browne emptying the bench after the Clippers made it 4-0 three minutes into the second half.

The Cohasset coach made a point of saying none of the Mashpee goals were the fault of senior goaltender Curt Kahn, who moved from midfield to keeper at the end of pre-season and was starting just his second varsity game.

Though displeased with the overall performance, Nigro was pleased with the post-game reaction of his players.

"To their credit, most of them didn't need me to tell them they'd played a bad game," said Nigro. "We had some guys who were pretty upset, like (captain) Evan Pestone, and that's good. They should have been.

"Obviously, I would have preferred a win, but I think this tie reinforced what we need to be doing."

Still, the coach noted he wasn't banking on anything until he saw evidence on the field. Fortunately, he only had to wait 24 hours to get his evidence.

The Skippers were back on the Cape on Friday, traveling to Chatham for a non-league game.

Though Chatham did not present quite the challenge most SSL teams provide, Nigro was happy to see his troops revert to his prescribed brand of possession soccer, which calls for more short crisp passing and less ballhandling and dump and run attacking.

The 6-1 final was not as close as it sounded, as Chatham did not record its first shot on goal until late in the second half when most of the Skippers, including Kahn, were on the sideline.

Jesse Brewer scored twice for the Skippers, and Pestone got off the schneid with his first tally of the season. Striker David Santiago also scored his first goal of the season, and freshman Aidan Buick recorded his first ever high school goal.

"I would have liked a little bit more competitive a game, but we did the things we needed to and built up some confidence in our game plan, I think," noted Nigro.

Boys soccer notes

After three straight games on the road, the boys were finally slated to play a home game tomorrow, with SSL rival Abington coming to town (3:30 p.m. start). It's back on the road Saturday, though, the Div. 3 Skippers traveling to Newton South for a non-league game against a tough larger division (2) team.

"That should be a good test for us," noted Nigro. "Newton generally has good soccer teams, and they should really make us work, which is what we want right now. We don't want to go in to the tourney without having been pushed a few times."

Before the end of the half, the Lady Skippers struck again for a 2-1 halftime lead. Again, McKenney led Buckley to the goal, this time with a rolling pass, after which Buckley faked a shot, then deked around the goalie and slipped one through in to the low corner.

Although a Holbrook comeback was not out of the question in the second half, Cohasset put those thoughts to rest, as Flanagan scored just 90 seconds in. Junior Gillian Weber was credited with the assist, beating MacNeil and Sullivan with an outside-foot pass.

"Maura (McKenney) is just playing out of her mind. She and Jen are my two staples."

Cohasset girls soccer coach Deb Beal

Buckley finished her terrific day by scoring a pretty line-drive shot from 15 yards out, completing her first career hat trick. Flanagan became the second multi-goal scorer when she added an icing on the cake goal with less than a minute left. McKenney had the assist on Flanagan's second tally, giving her three for the game.

"Maura is just playing out of her mind," complimented Beal. "She and Jen are my two staples. I always preach the first five and the last five minutes of each half are the most important."

The Skippers will attempt to keep their momentum going today with a road game at league rival Abington.

MIKE SPELLMAN

As jobs go, Schoolboy Sports Editor is a pretty fun gig.

It's a refreshing release from every day life to know that 99 percent of what we write is expected to be upbeat and positive. It's also great to know that most of what you're responsible for putting in the paper is genuinely appreciated.

Of course, like any job, this one is not without its headaches.

One of the largest nuisances, for example, is the steady torrent of calls we receive from the public wondering why their cause or subject is not receiving more coverage. While this can indeed by a pain to deal with, the angst experienced here pales in comparison to that created by our number one pet peeve — which is, ironically, exactly the opposite kind of situation.

By far, what bothers us most is when we have every intention and desire to devote coverage to a cause or subject and get no cooperation from the person who is in the foremost position to assist in that endeavor.

I'm speaking, of course, about the coaches.

There are several coaches in our publication area who it seems have not yet figured out how to dial the phone. Unless we go to see them or are fortunate enough to get them to actually answer the phone, we don't talk.

Some of these coaches are apologetic when we finally hook up with them, while some seem unperturbed by the matter. Others, however, get defensive and even nasty when we, say, leave repeated messages on their voice mail. A few times, we've even had tables turned on us, as coaches have asked why we can't come out to the field to talk.

The short answer to that question is we'd love to...heck, who wouldn't want to hang around a field rather than an office? Unfortunately, this is not possible. We have two full-timers covering 13 towns – that's a whole lot of teams to cover and not a lot of time.

Not that this is pertinent to the overriding issue here. Getting the word out there about their teams and athletes is as much the coaches responsibility as it is our's. This doesn't come from us; this is what the hiring bodies and school administrations espouse. Beyond that, every parent who pays a user fee and kid who puts it on the line for that coach has a right to expect it.

If that's not being explained clearly to coaches at their job interviews, it should be. Of course, you'd figure common should kick in too, but that's another issue.

Naturally, coaches are busy folks, especially in season. All of them have separate full-time jobs, and "real lives" beyond that. However, if any is so busy they can't devote five to 10 minutes every now and again to getting the word out there, it says here they're too busy to have the job at all.

Sorry to complain so openly, but it's getting real tiresome fielding calls from members of the community who are disheartened by the lack of exposure their child or favorite team is receiving due to these uncooperative coaches.

"Why is a baseball team getting coverage every week, but the track team gets next to nothing," I remember one parent asking me not to long ago.

As much as we'd love to tell the truth, we generally find ourselves covering for these incommunicado coaches. We don't want it getting back to him or her, after all, that we'd ratted them out. Indeed, the thought of him or her becoming more uncooperative is a daunting one.

I should point out here that the vast majority of coaches in our area are extremely cooperative. Several even make a point to call in results on their own (Norwell golf coach Ken Camerota, Scituate golf coach Bob Beatty, Silver Lake girls tennis coach Kevin Dunn and Cohasset three season coach Torin Sweeney come immediately to mind). A few even e-mail reliably. Cohasset lacrosse coach Terry Kahn and retired Scituate track coach Bill Smith (who will be deeply missed at this address for a lot more reasons than that) practically did the job for me.

Some may say this much help is making us lazy as reporters. I'd say it frees us up to provide more and better coverage for other kids. Whatever...the bottom line is the kids are getting quality coverage. Show me the downside of that.

Who knows, maybe we're taking the wrong approach. Maybe we should start naming names, and not just to inquiring minds, but in this space as well.

It's worth thinking about.

T.K. O'Malley 10k Road Race runs Oct. 6

Registrations are now being accepted for the seventh annual T.K. O'Malley 10k Road Race Oct. 6. The TK-10k is a huge community event. It attracts hundreds of runners, involves many local businesses as sponsors and benefits town recreation activities for all ages.

Registration forms are available at all area health clubs, and at the following sponsors: T.K. O'Malley's Sports Café on Front Street, Front Street Book Shop, Kennedy Bros. Physical Therapy in Braintree and Boston and Café Morada on Front Street.

Other sponsors are New Balance, Joseph's Hardware, Premier Dodge, D.J. Electric Co. Inc., M.J. Hallin Co. Inc., Hingham Federal Credit Union of Scituate, Hingham Orthodontics and Pipeline Salon.

The race begins at 1 p.m. Oct. 6 at Scituate Common. The course goes through Scituate Harbor, along the coast to the Lighthouse and back to the Common. The course is New England Track and Field Association certified, so that participants will be able to use their times to qualify for marathons.

Prizes go to three male and female finishers in each of the following categories: 18 and under; 19-29; 30-39; 40-49; 50-59; 60-69; 70 and over. Refreshments will be available. As always, a post-race rally will be held at T.K. O'Malley's Sports Café.

Registration costs $15, and early registrations are encouraged, the first 300 entrants are guaranteed a T-shirt. Completed forms should be mailed with a $15 check payable to TK-10K, to Howard Ardolino, 299 First Parish Road, Scituate, 02066.

The race benefits the people of Scituate by raising money for the Friends of Scituate Recreation. Proceeds help pay for Recreation Department programs and activities for Scituate citizens of all ages.

For more information, call Howard Ardolino at 781-545-1463.

Hingham Indoor Lax signups extended

South Shore Sports Center (in Hingham) will be hosting a Fall/Winter indoor lacrosse program for all youth levels (Grades 3 – 8). Program includes staff coaches, league certified referees, skills development and regulation games, competitive playing conditions, and convenient hours (doesn't conflict with other sports!). This a great way to sharpen your skills or get an introduction to the game while having fun playing on a full-sized astro-turf field.

Due to overwhelming response, the sign-up period has been extended through today, Thursday, Sept. 19, with the season now starting on Friday, Sept. 20 (rather than previously announced Sept. 13). This will allow more teams and players to join in the fun and increase the competitiveness of the program for everyone. To sign up or to get more information, please contact 781-740-1105 or contact us online at maxlax@msn.com.

Water video explores 'Wonders of Water'

Aquarion Water Co. of Massachusetts is presenting its "Wonders of Water" educational video to Hingham, Hull and North Cohasset-area schools as an introduction to Aquarion's water science educational partnership.

The video, tailored for middle school-aged youngsters, describes aspects of water treatment and how pollution affects the water supply, as well as the importance of protecting area wetlands and watersheds.

The video packages also provides teachers with hands-on water science lesson plans and curriculum guides.

'Beyond Tolerance' is topic Sept. 30

The Cohasset Diversity Committee is sponsoring the program "Beyond Tolerance" at Cohasset Middle High School on Monday evening, Sept. 30. The guest speaker will be Victor Kazanjian, Dean of Religious and Spiritual Life and Co-Director of the Peace and Justice Studies Program at Wellesley College. The program begins at 7:30 p.m. and will be held in the Cohasset Middle High School's new cafeteria.

Send in your school news!

The Cohasset Mariner would like to hear from teachers, principals, parents, school groups and organizations with school news to share. Items may be sent by email to editor Mary Ford at mford@cnc.com.

Please let us know well in advance if you would like the Mariner photographer to cover your school event or activity. The Mariner also welcomes story ideas about school projects and activities. Call Mary Ford at 781-741-2933 for more information.

Hands-on fun at Cohasset Harbor

The Cohasset Center for Student Coastal Research (CCSCR) welcomes the New England Aquarium, Saturday, Sept. 28, starting at 11 a.m. for some hands on fun for all. This will give a glimpse to see what the center has to offer.

In addition to the New England Aquarium visit one of our local lobstermen at his boat. Come listen about his day at "the office."

The Cohasset Historical Society will be on hand to give a talk on the history of the former Hagerty house, Mariners Park area as well as a highlight of Cohasset harbor's rich history.

On display you will see the worthwhile works of Cohasset students' field studies needed by the Board of Health, mandated by the EPA, such as fecal coliform, salinity and flushing studies of the harbor. Half the pollution entering waterways is from surface water runoff which is being tested by student efforts.

Lunch will be served from 11:30 a.m.-2:30 p.m..

StepUp Consortium chairman selected

Roger Shea of Abington has been elected Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Southeast Tech Prep (StepUp) Consortium. Shea succeeds John Kosko, superintendent director of South Shore Regional in Hanover.

StepUp programs combine high school with the first two years of college. Students are given the opportunity to explore career options and determine which pathway best match their interests and abilities.

The consortium includes 13 area high schools, including Blue Hills Regional of Canton, Brockton, Avon, Bridgewater-Raynham, East Bridgewater, Quincy, Randolph, Silver Lake Regional in Kingston, South Shore Regional in Hanover, Southeastern Regional Vocational Technical High School in South Easton, Stoughton, Weymouth and Whitman-Hanson Regional High School. The consortium also serves post-secondary institutions, such as UMASS-Boston, Massasoit Community College, Southeastern Technical Institute and Wentworth Institute of Technology in Boston.

Shea has been involved in vocational education at Massasoit Community College since 1992. He has been a full time faculty member at Massasoit since 2001. He served as regional director for former Congressman Brian Donnelly. He also served as chairman of the consortium during the school year 1998-99.

Karen Ward, executive director of the consortium "congratulated Shea on his election and his commitment to public education." Ward also praised John Kosko "for his tenure especially for assisting her during her first year as director."

Parent workshop on 'Bully Busters'

Every other Friday, beginning Sept. 20 from noon to 1 p.m., at the Dillon Gallery of the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset Village, a different speaker will be presented. The first speaker is Dr. Alan Jacobson, a psychologist who offers a parent workshop called "Bully Busters."

Jacobson is director of Outpatient Services at BayView Associates and holds a clinical appointment at McLean Hospital in Belmont.

Recent surveys have rated bullying as a leading cause of stress and involves a majority of students. Jacobson offers parents strategies to deal with children who have been bullied and teaches them methods to open lines of communication and build assertiveness and self esteem.

This informal talk is open to everyone, there is no fee, and feel free to bring a snack or your lunch. A brief question and answer period will follow.

Sponsored by the Social Service League of Cohasset, donations can voluntarily be made at the South Shore Art Center.

For information, call 781-383-0771.

14,000 women die every year in the U.S. from ovarian cancer.
Get the facts that could save your life.
www.OvarianCancerAwareness.org
Ovarian cancer can strike a woman at any age.
In the early stages its symptoms are often subtle and easily confused with other ailments. Many women with ovarian cancer don't seek help until the disease has already begun to spread. If detected early, when the cancer is still confined to the ovary, the five-year survival rate is over 90%.
Ovarian cancer symptoms include: bloating, a feeling of fullness in pelvic or abdominal region, gas, frequent or urgent urination, nausea, indigestion, constipation, diarrhea, menstrual disorders, pain during intercourse, fatigue, backaches.
Take action if symptoms last more than 2-3 weeks.

CEA presents educational series for children of aging parents

By Molly Pierson
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Those struggling with questions and issues involving their aging parents may find answers and reassurance during a four-part educational series taking place in October at Cohasset's South Shore Community Center.

Cohasset Elder Affairs will present four seminars led by professionals in the legal, health and public safety fields. Each Wednesday evening in October, caregivers, with or without their parents, can enjoy a light supper at 6 p.m. followed by a two-hour program and a discussion session.

"We're trying to bridge the gap between what the parents know and what the children need to know," said Kathy Bryanton, director of the Cohasset Senior Center. "Legal aspects are often the most important and least discussed between the generations."

Those issues will be addressed Oct. 2 in the first seminar, "Before the Crisis Hits!", which will be led by Paul Tierney and Susan Cox, both local elder law attorneys. They will discuss protecting parents' assets, wills, trusts and other legal issues.

The Oct. 9 seminar, entitled "Getting Involved in Your Parents' Affairs," covers several thorny issues.

Cohasset Police Chief Robert Jackson will talk about home alarms, preventing break-ins and other safety concerns. Norfolk County Deputy Sheriff Cheryl Bambery will focus on "Are You OK?," the telephone reassurance program.

Michelle Ellick from the state Registry of Motor Vehicles will discuss the 55 Alive program and licensing issues. "The elderly are living longer and keeping their licenses longer," said Bryanton. "We have to talk to them about when it's time to give up that license and turn to community resources for transportation. It's a tough discussion."

"We're trying to bridge the gap between what the parents know and what the children need to know."

— Kathy Bryanton, director of the Cohasset Senior Center

Barbara Farnsworth, who has worked in every aspect of the elder care field, will discuss the availability of adult day care and other respite possibilities for caregivers and explain how adult children can act as advocates for their parents.

The October 16 program, "How to Beat the High Cost of Health Insurance," covers senior health insurance options, prescription drug coverage and long term care insurance. "We've seen a lot of changes in the health care system and more are coming," said Bryanton.

Peggy McDonough, state director of the SHINE (Serving Health Insurance Needs of Elders) program, and attorney John Martin, who is also a SHINE counselor, will address those issues.

The Oct. 23 seminar, "Confronting a Tough Issue," concerns elder fraud and dishonest caregivers. Dorothy Anne Vitale, Norfolk County Director of Senior Initiatives, and Norfolk Assistant District Attorney David Raftery will discuss how to check on people who work with seniors in their homes and when to contact the District Attorney's office if fraud is suspected. Attorney Pamela Meister from the state Attorney General's office will talk about scams against the elderly and how to protect against them.

The cost is $10 for the entire series, which is open to all area residents. The light supper before each session will be prepared by Anna Abbruzzese's senior gourmet club. The community center is located at 3 North Main St., Cohasset. To register or for more information, contact Cohasset Elder Affairs at 781-383-9112.

There will be a free focus group meeting to identify caregivers' needs at 6 p.m. Sept. 25 at the community center. This session will be co-sponsored by South Shore Elder Services and Cohasset Elder Affairs. Register at 781-848-3910, extension 439 or 335.

Hospital to honor Cohasset man with leadership award

The Franciscan Children's Hospital and Rehabilitation Center will honor Cohasset resident Douglas Chamberlain for his many years of commitment and support during the hospital's annual Community Leadership Award Dinner on Sept. 25 at the Fairmont Copley Plaza Hotel in Boston.

The Community Leadership Award is the hospital's way of recognizing special heroes for their outstanding leadership and contributions in the community. This year in addition to Chamberlain, The Boston Celtics and Citizens Bank will be recognized.

As Chairman of the Board since 1995, Chamberlain led the efforts of the Board of Trustees to restore the fiscal health of the hospital at a time when its survival was at risk and the potential discontinuation of services, a reality. The American Hospital Association honored the Franciscan Children's Hospital in 1997 when it was awarded the "Great Comeback of the Year Award" for its financial soundness, pursuit of mission and responsiveness to community.

Chamberlain is also a Founder & President of Appleton Partners, Inc., in Boston. In addition to his service to the hospital, he is involved with the Boston Academy of Music; is a member of the Advisory Board of Boston University's Graduate Management program and received the Alumni of the Year Award from the University earlier this year.

This year's dinner called "Recognizing Our Heroes", will include a dinner, an awards ceremony and silent and live auctions. The dinner's keynote speaker will be WEEI AM Host and former New England Patriot Steve Nelson. Comedian Lenny Clarke will participate as the guest auctioneer and WCVB TV anchor, Natalie Jacobsen will be the emcee.

'Hills of Hull' house tour

On Saturday, Sept. 28, there will be a unique opportunity to tour seven private homes tucked away in special locations in the neighborhoods of Hull to benefit Wellspring, a community-based human service organization serving Hull and surrounding towns.

Each of these 'Hills of Hull' homes is perched high on one of the town's many hills and captures a commanding view of the open ocean, harbor and even the Boston skyline. These lovely vistas also include Worlds End, and many of the islands of Boston Harbor, depending on which property is being visited.

Called "The Hills of Hull," the tour will be held between10 a.m. and 4 p.m. Advance tickets may be purchased for $20 prior to Aug. 28 at the following locations: Bookport, Hingham; Cards & Shards, Cohasset; and Mermaids in Hull. Tickets may also be purchased by sending a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Wellspring, 814 Nantasket Ave., Hull 02045 with an enclosed check.

The day of the tour tickets may be purchased for $25 at the Hull Town Hall. Further information about the tour is available by calling the staff at Wellspring at 781-925-3211.

Wellspring serves many towns throughout the South Shore. It is financed by income from its thrift shop, community donations and private grants.

Brass concert at St. Stephen's

As part of its Sunday Concert Series now in its 12th year, St. Stephen's Church in Cohasset is presenting the Huntington Brass Quintet in concert on Sunday, Sept., 22, at 3 p.m.

The Huntington Brass, founded in 1997 at Boston's New England Conservatory by Bron Wright, trombonist, is a group in residence at St. Stephen's, and its players include Mark Emery and Tom Cupples; trumpet, David Ohanian; horn, Bron Wright; trombone, and Randall Montgomery, tuba.

Founder Wright frequently performs with the Boston Pops and many of the orchestras in and around Boston, and is a soloist with the New England Symphonic Ensemble. A new member to the group this year is horn player David Ohanian, a founding member of the Empire Brass and player with the Canadian Brass.

The theme of the day's concert will be "Scenes in Music," and composers represented will be Albinoni, Hindemith, Sampson, and the noted Bostonian, Daniel Pinkham.

The church is located at 16 Highland Ave. and there is plenty of parking available at the village car park. The concert is free of charge, but donations will be accepted. Come early and hear a playing of the bells of the church's 57-bell carillon a half-hour before the program.

Collector's Choice exhibit at art center

The work of artists John Singer Sargent, Pablo Picasso, Paul Klee, Grandma Moses, Marc Chagall, Rembrandt, and August Renoir couldn't be more different. These artists, however, all share one little-known commonality.

They all have had their masterpieces on display at the South Shore Art Center in its traditional Collector's Choice exhibition. The Collector's Choice exhibition affords residents of the South Shore and beyond, an opportunity to view, in their own regional art center, museum-quality works of art from private collections. Artwork procured thus far includes work by Andy Warhol, William Wegman, Abe Morrell, Anders Zorn, Marc Chagall and Salvador Dali. Collector's Choice '02 will feature recent acquisitions and focus primarily on what collectors have collected in the last 10 years. The public will have only three days to view the exhibition before the work is returned to its owners and is no longer accessible to the public.

Collector's Choice is scheduled for Sept. 27-29. A gala opening reception will take place at the South Shore Art Center on Friday, Sept. 27, beginning at 5:30 p.m., followed by a dinner at a private seaside home. The exhibition preview party will be enhanced by the opportunity to purchase collectible frames decorated by popular celebrities. Twenty personalities from the art world as well as the world of sports, politics and literature have agreed to decorate and ersonalize wooden frames that will be offered to the highest bidder in a silent auction.

Tickets for this exhibition fundraiser are $135 ($125 for South Shore Art Center members). On Saturday, Sept. 28, the exhibition will be open to the public from 10a.m. to 4 p.m. On Sunday, Sept. 29, the exhibition will open at 11:30 a.m. with Music Amidst the Masterpieces, an informal brunch and at 1 p.m. a concert by the Boston Chamber Music Society, Ronald Thomas, Artistic Director. Tickets are $35. Reservations for both events can be made by calling 781-383-2787.

Fall barn sale at fire museum

A fall barn sale will take place at Bare Cove Fire Museum on Saturday, Oct. 26 from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. at 19 Fort Hill St., rain or shine. Donations are gratefully accepted; please call 781-749-0028.

The Bare Cove Fire Museum has a history of supporting the cost of the non-profit museum by holding a bi-annual barn sale in a storage building in Bare Cove Park. Items for sale include skis and poles, books, records (78s and other sizes), tapes, speakers, dishes, furniture, toys, puzzles, clothes, computer games, tools, art, holiday decorations, sports equipment and household appliances. Aside from raising money on the day of the barn sale, museum members will be on hand to answer questions you may have about the history of firefighting in Hingham.

The museum's neighbor, the South Shore Model Railroad Club is having an open house the same day. Everyone is welcome to both venues!

Buttonwood hosts children's author

Marie-Louise Gay will visit Buttonwood Books in Cohasset on Wed. Sept. 25 from 3- 4:30 p.m.. Gay has won innumerable awards for her children's books and is the author/illustrator of the best-selling Stella series ("Stella, Fairy of the Forest", "Stella, Queen of the Snow" and "Stella, Star of the Sea"). Gay has the wonderful ability to create "attitude" with a few strokes of her pen and is equally clever with words. She is a frequent visitor to schools in Canada and enjoys working with children. Her presentation will include an interactive drawing activity which Buttonwood's young friends won't want to miss! Please call 781-383-2665 for additional information or to order your signed copy if unable to attend. Free

Chamber music at the art center

The Boston Chamber Music Society will present an afternoon concert in the Bancroft Gallery of the South Shore Art Center, Sunday, Sept. 29, during the Collector's Choice exhibition. The Music Amidst the Masterpieces concert will culminate three days of activities celebrating this extraordinary exhibition.

The Boston Chamber Music Society is an ensemble of eight musicians who come together in different combinations to prepare and perform chamber music.

The performance will begin at 1 p.m., Sunday, Sept.29 at the South Shore Art Center. A light brunch will be served beginning at 11:30 a.m.. This concert will benefit exhibitions and programs at the South Shore Art Center. Tickets are $35 ($25 for members of the South Shore Art Center). Seating is limited. To reserve a seat, or for more information call 781-383-2787.

GIMME SHELTER

Hull Seaside Animal Rescue found great homes for two cats, Jake & Tina - one month ago, they were eating garbage and now they're living on Jerusalem Road!

Walter is a two-year-old rescued stray, with long hair and a gorgeous tiger coat. He loves attention but should have a patient home with no children or other pets, as he sometimes gets scared and panics.

All cats have been neutered/spayed and are up to date on their shots. The shelter has lots of other great cats and kittens needing homes, so feel free to contact the shelter at 781-925-8584 or admire their photos at www.hullseaside.petfinder.org . You can also visit the shelter's Web site: www.hsar.org. The Hull Seaside Animal Rescue is a non-profit organization staffed entirely by volunteers.

All is Faire in love

Couple exchanges vows in Renaissance splendor

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

For eight weekends in late summer and early autumn, a piece of South Carver steps back in time and place to16th century England as King Richard's Faire takes over the bucolic and black forest surroundings on Route 58.

"This seemed like a natural for us to have our wedding here. Julie's (Andreone's) been a huge fan of King Richard's Faire for a long time and we had our first date here about a year ago."
Tim Forrester of Bourne

Each season in Carver since 1982 has brought a dazzling and enchanting array of new attractions to the Faire, which draws thousands of visitors into a magical recreation of a medieval English marketplace at festival time. The usual mainstays of actors, dancers, puppeteers, storytellers, jugglers, fire eaters, stilt walkers, minstrels, magicians and musicians, plus a roving cast of royalty and beggars, highwaymen and guards, knights and wenches, swordsmen and soothsayers,

King Richard was on hand to give his blessings to the marriage of Bourne residents and Faire fans Tim Forrester and Julie Andreone, pictured with Forrester's 8-year-old daughter, Jessica. The couple tied the knot last weekend at the Faire grounds in Carver.

Photographer captures country's beauty in Science Center show

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

The photography of John Lewieckl is on display through the end of the month at the South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell.

Be it mountains and waterfalls in California, vast plains in the Midwest, or scenes from our own backyard in Wompatuck State Park, Hingham photographer John Lewiecki is fascinated with the splendor of natural scenery found throughout the United States. He also believes that scenery is too often taken for granted.

Lewiecki's one-man photo show, titled simply "United States Travels," is currently on display at Norwell's South Shore Natural Science Center through Sept. 30. His collection of choice color shots could persuade some world-travelling viewers to not forget what there is to see right here in the states. But mostly they serve to emphasize the photographer's genuine passion for the American landscape on its own terms.

"The United States for me is an incredible place to travel around, take in scenery and take photos. The changes in landscape, architecture and culture as you go from one region to the next are just amazing."
Hingham photographer John Lewiecki

"People are often eager to travel outside of the United States, or at least that's the first thing they think of when they think of travelling. They tend to overlook taking the opportunity to see what's in their own backyard," said Lewiecki, who has been an amateur photographer for 20 years.

"The United States for me is an incredible place to travel around, take in scenery and take photos. The changes in landscape, architecture and culture as you go from one region to the next are just amazing," he said.

Lewiecki, 37, has found more time to pursue his interests in photography these days. An engineer by trade, he was laid off in May from his job as a technical support manager at a Needham software company. He currently runs a small photo studio, called The Painted Turtle, from the basement of his home and which he'd like to expand into a full-time operation for in-studio and on-site work.

A painted turtle is also the subject of one of Lewiecki's series of exhibit shots taken in Florida, which tend to focus on close-ups of wildlife and botanical life. Along with "Boy With Turtle" — a boy's hand holding the multi-colored shelled creature, there's attention-grabbing pieces such as "Hummingbird," "Butterfly" and "Alligator," the last-named featuring a particularly ornery set of eyes on the beast. The floral studies "Yellow," "Pink" and "Red" are named for the colors of their subjects.

Familiar faces on stage in Company's 'Songs For A New World'

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Since joining the artistic staff of the Company Theatre 18 years ago as Musical Director, Michael Joseph has helped present countless fully staged Broadway and off-Broadway musicals to South Shore audiences. This week, however, Joseph will be trying something just a little different when he leads the band for the Norwell-based theater's first concert musical, "Songs For A New World."

"We've never done a show concert-style before," Joseph explained recently by telephone. "This piece is very exciting, because the composer, Jason Robert Brown, has written so many wonderful songs for it."

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Most soufflés are no more than whipped egg whites folded into a simple white sauce (a béchamel) or a similar mixture of milk, flour, and butter. The mixture is then baked and the resulting dessert is light, creamy at the center, and delicate. However, soufflés can also be made with a variety of "alternative" bases.

I tested a few including applesauce, pureed bananas, and even apricot baby food (it seemed like a good idea at the time) but the one ingredient that outshined the rest was cream cheese. It has enough substance to work much like a béchamel, but it provides more flavor and texture.

However, a cream cheese soufflé is quite different than the standard French construct so I needed to perform a series of tests. For starters, I found that, to lighten the mixture, I had to beat the egg yolks with sugar and then add the cream cheese which is also whipped. When I simply added yolks to the cream cheese and then tried to fold in beaten egg whites, the mixture was much too heavy. I also found that room temperature cream cheese was essential since cold cheese is difficult to aerate while beating. I then experimented with other ingredients and found that a half cup of heavy cream was helpful in lightening the cream cheese mixture. I also liked just one tablespoon of melted butter for flavor along with a teaspoon of vanilla. Finally, I played around with additional flavorings and remembered a recipe from Cook's Magazine from the 1980's that called for ground cardamom. I tried it here and loved it. It adds an unusual but complementary flavor to the cream cheese. You can, if you like, serve this dessert with a fruit sauce. (puree fresh or defrosted frozen fruit with some superfine sugar.) However, it is perfectly fine on its own with a good cup of coffee or espresso.

CREAM CHEESE SOUFFLE Note that cream cheese soufflés have a rather smooth, tough-looking top, unlike the more extravagant visuals offered by classic soufflés. Inside, however, the soufflé is rich and exciting. It is very important to leave the center of this soufflé runny; the still liquid cream cheese makes its own sauce.

Butter and sugar to coat soufflé dish or ramekins
3 egg yolks, room temperature
1/2 cup powdered sugar
8 ounces cream cheese, room temperature
1 tablespoon flour
1/2 cup heavy cream
1 tablespoon melted butter
1 teaspoon vanilla
1/4 teaspoon ground cardamom
Pinch of salt
5 egg whites, room temperature preferred
1/4 teaspoon cream of tartar
1 tablespoon granulated sugar

1. Heat oven to 350 degrees. Coat soufflé dish or ramekins with butter and sugar.

2. Beat the yolks and powdered sugar together with an electric mixer until light yellow and fluffy, 2 to 3 minutes. Add cream cheese and continue beating until light and fluffy, another 2 minutes. Add flour, heavy cream, melted butter, vanilla, cardamom, and salt. Mix until just combined.

3.Add the egg whites to a large metal mixing bowl. Whip on medium high speed (setting 6 on the KitchenAid) for 30 seconds, add the cream of tartar, and then add the 1 tablespoon sugar gradually, beating until the whites hold a 2-inch peak. They should still be soft and glossy.

4. Fold the egg whites into the cream cheese mixture with a large rubber spatula. Gently add the soufflé mixture to the prepared dish(es) and bake for about 18 minutes for individual ramekins and 20 to 25 minutes for a soufflé dish. The center should still be very moist and a bit loose. (Soufflés may be checked. Remove from oven, use two large spoons to cut a small hole in the center. If not cooked, place back in oven.)

5. Serve as is or with a fruit sauce. Serves 6 to 8

All is Faire in love

not to mention the front-gate greeting from King Richard himself, offer a feast for the eyes and ears.

Adding to the festive atmosphere in this 21st season are court jesters (or standup comics, if you will), pipers, more balladeers and jugglers, the exotic and mysterious gargoyles and His Lord The Royal Falconer, Knighthawkes.

And for the first time this past weekend the Faire played host to a couple's nuptials. On Saturday the Faire featured the a real-life wedding of festival fans and Bourne residents Tim Forrester and Julie Andreone. The bride and groom donned traditional British Isles garb for the occasion and were surrounded by friends and family along with other merry faire-goers on their big day.

"This seemed like a natural for us to have our wedding here," said Forrester following the ceremony. "Julie's (Andreone's) been a huge fan of King Richard's Faire for a long time and we had our first date here about a year ago. She's been coming here for a lot longer than I have, but I'm now really getting to like the event myself."

Forrester, 33, is a Gulf War veteran who served in the 24th Infantry Marines Division in Desert Storm. He is now a sergeant in the Delta Company, the 1st of the 182nd Infantry in the Army Reserves and has an eight-year-old daughter, Jessica, from a previous marriage. Andreone, 30, also with a military background, is now retired from the U.S. Coast Guard. Both of the newlyweds are natives of Bourne and graduated from Bourne High School.

While Andreone strolled the aisle in the always traditional, custom-designed white gown, Forrester got even more into the spirit of the Faire, sporting a plaid kilt along with other various shades of Celtic green.

The couple joined the opening procession with family members to the accompaniment of a piper's fanfare, and were serenaded with a fiddle duet of Beethoven's "Ode to Joy" as the ceremony concluded.

Among the new features added to the Faire's program this season, the most publicized are two first-time comedy revues, the dubiously titled "Puke and Snot" and the sword fighting-themed "To the Hilt." The former is named for the not-so-flattering stage names of the standup comic team Peter Moore and John Gamoke, who deliver three half-hour sets per afternoon of rapid-fire, nightclub-style routines charged with healthy doses of double-take, double-entendre and innuendo, sort of like Las Vegas goes to 16th century Canterbury.

"To the Hilt" features the Elizabethan spurned-lover characters Katya and Leonardo, played by actors/comedians Jennifer Christa Palmer and Ryan H. Gigliotti respectively. Though not quite as risque as "Puke and Snot" in its snappy dialogue material, "Hilt" manages to get not just modestly suggestive in its own right, particularly during the sword fighting segments.

The Faire also marked a somber milestone this year — the passing of the Faire's original Queen Katherine, Barbara Burinski Shelton, who died July 17. Shelton, for many years played the Queen to Faire founder Richard Shapiro's King Richard. Shapiro passed away in 1997. Out of respect for the late Katherine, the Faire's current King Richard greets visitors without a Queen this season.

King Richard's Faire will run every weekend in Carver through Oct. 20 including the Columbus Day holiday. For more information call \ 508-866-5391 or visit www.kingrichardsfaire.net has described "Songs For A New World" as a musical about "hitting a wall and having to make a choice, or take a stand, or turn around and go back. Brown has said that the musical is an autobiographical look at his early years as a composer trying to make it in New York. The show has been produced in New York, New Orleans and, last season, at Boston's Speakeasy Stage.

As Joseph learned when Company announced its plans to present "Songs For A New World," the show appeals not only to audiences, but also to performers.

"We auditioned an amazing number of excellent performers. People are really attracted to this show, because each song is like a one act play. The show has so many musical styles, from pop and ballads to R&B. There is something for everyone."

There may be someone for everyone, too, especially frequent visitors to the Company Theatre who have favorite performers from past shows. "Although we didn't set out to make this any kind of a Company Theatre reunion, we ended up casting the show with people who have played leads or featured roles in our previous shows. Our cast is made up entirely of people who could be working in the professional arena. That so many talented people would turn out, is a true testament to how much they love this show," explained Joseph.

And, perhaps evidence that these particular performers were ready and willing to take on something new. "The music is very challenging, and the harmonies are very difficult, but everyone in the cast has or her opportunity to shine vocally."

("Songs For A New World," under the musical direction of Weymouth's Michael Joseph, and featuring Melissa Andronico, Joyce Avitable, Barbara Baumgarten, Caroline deLima, Brian Duarte, Jackie Duffy, Peter Dupre, Mike Foley, James Jackson Jr., John King, Sherry Malone, Paula Markowicz, Christine Maus, A. John Porcaro, Steve Shannon, and Tracey Silva will be presented by the Company Theatre, 30 Accord Park Drive, Norwell, September 20-21. For tickets and more information, call' 781/871-2787 or visit www.companytheatre.com).

views including "Badlands National Park," "Glacier National Park" and "Vernal Falls, Yosemite," Lewiecki makes good use of the effects of shadows and light under sunlit skies. A series of shots from Bermuda, including scenes in Hamilton Harbor and Warwick Long Bay, are distinctly diverse but all conveying a strong sense of land-meets-water synergy.

Closer to home, the photographer devotes a solid portion of the exhibit to subjects of woodlands, under brushes, ponds, coves and ravines taken in Wompatuck State Park, hinting that views amidst the grounds of the local public estate hold their own in allure and charm with the more famous national sites featured elsewhere in the show. The overall subject matter also diversifies to manmade, intimately detailed objects, such as the elegant "Acoma Pueblo Pottery" from the Southwest.

In addition to Lewiecki's 27 photos on display, the show includes up to forty more of his pieces in boxes that viewers can sample by hand.

John Lewiecki's photographs will be on display at the South Shore Natural Science Center's Vine Hall gallery through Sept. 30. The South Shore Natural Science Center is located at 48 Jacobs Lane in Norwell. For more information, please call the Center at (781) 659-2559.

Plant bulbs in autumn for springtime rewards

Green thumbs up

Part 2

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

While the memories of a long, hot, dry summer are sure to linger into the winter months, cooler temperatures and soaking rains have rekindled the gardening spirit as the fall planting season gets underway. Our local nurseries are overflowing with colorful fall-blooming plants and decorations. Spectacular chrysanthemums in warm harvest hues, brilliant yellows and whites, burgundy, and shades of purple and pink create a kaleidoscope of festive color. Carefree sedums and pots of asters, smothered with multitudes of daisies in vibrant tones of rich royal purple, glowing pink, vivid raspberry and glistening white, intermingle with the long-lasting foliage of decorative kale to produce a dazzling display. Bittersweet, gourds, pumpkins and cornstalks will soon appear to decorate and revitalize our tired landscapes and announce the arrival of autumn.

A glorious selection of enticing spring-flowering bulbs awaits. The term "bulb" has come to encompass a large group of plants that are able to store energy in fleshy, underground structures. The majority of these commonly grown spring-flowering bulbs are "true bulbs" including onions (Alliums), glory-of-the-snow (Chionodoxa), checkered lily and crown imperial (Fritillaria), snow drops (Galanthus), hyacinths, grape hyacinths (Muscari), daffodils (Narcissus), squill (Scilla), and tulips. If you were to slice one of these true bulbs vertically at this time of year, you would discover a complete plant inside, with miniature flower buds, leaves and stems. The outer area is actually modified leaves or scales that contain food to sustain the plant during dormancy and early growth. These scales are joined at the bottom with a basal plate from which the roots will emerge. Set true bulbs in the planting hole on their flattened end, known as the basal plate, with the tip of the bulb up.

A planting of true bulbs usually expands each season by producing new bulbs alongside the original parent bulb that also continues to grow and produce flowers. Daffodils are a prime example, their offspring readily seen when one purchases bulbs with multiple "noses", each of which has the capability of producing blossoms the following spring.

Although tulips are also true bulbs, after a few growing seasons, the parent bulb often dies, leaving only immature bulbs behind that usually produce only leaves until these new bulbs grow large enough to produce flowers. To ensure a continuous show of glorious tulips from season to season requires that new bulbs be planted every second or third year.

In addition to true bulbs, many plants that feature enlarged stems or swollen roots tend to be considered bulbs. Crocuses are technically corms characterized by multiple growing points or "eyes" on top with a basal plate from which the roots emanate. These quickly multiplying harbingers of spring should be planted on their flattened end with the rounded portion of the bulb on top. During growth, the corms shrivel away and new ones form on top or next to the old ones.

Greek anemones (Anemone blanda), which produce charming, daisy-like flowers in pink, blue or white set off by deep green divided foliage, and winter aconites (Eranthis) whose very early, honey-scented yellow flowers resemble buttercups, are classified as tubers. These oddly shaped bulbs are best soaked for 24 hours prior to planting. Like potatoes, roots and stems emerge from eyes scattered all over the surface so the bulbs have no top or bottom.

Plant most spring-flowering bulbs at a depth three times their diameter at the widest point. Be sure to read labels for recommended planting depths and keep a ruler handy while planting to ensure reasonable accuracy. The majority of spring-flowering bulbs are best planted in clumps or drifts rather than isolated or in single rows like marching soldiers. I prefer to use a shovel to dig one large hole for each grouping, loosening the soil in the bottom of the hole and spacing the bulbs within that hole. Be sure to firm the soil and water well immediately after planting all bulbs.

Each season, once the borders are clipped back, I manage to find several spaces to tuck in just a few additional bulbs. In the past, I was inclined to plant them toward the front of the perennial border as many are of short stature, but in recent years, I have found it advantageous to plant daffodils, in particular, toward the middle of the bed. These early bloomers sprout, flower and begin to decline before many other perennials have barely emerged and as the bulb foliage begins to yellow and fade, the leaves of the expanding perennials conceal the unsightly, yet critical, ripening leaves of the bulbs. Daylilies are especially good companions for bulbs as their slender, arching foliage gracefully shrouds the curing bulbs and fills the voids left once the bulbs go completely dormant later in the season.

While daffodils, tulips and crocuses tend to be the most popular choices, there are numerous delightful bulbs to add beauty to the spring garden. Look for early-blooming miniature Iris reticulata or Fritillaria meleagris, which naturalizes beautifully in filtered shade with their unique flowers resembling tiny lampshades. For moist soils, plant Camassia, which produces 3-foot blue or white spikes in late spring or the summer snowflake, Leucojum aestivum, which blooms in June with 2-foot spikes and attractive green tipped white bells that are reminiscent of giant snowdrops. Try something new this fall and watch the miracle unfold next spring.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 11

Pursue activities that help you to maintain a peaceful, positive attitude this morning. Jupiter opposes Neptune at 8:07 a.m., and the moon continues its travel in intensive Scorpio. Take time out for yourself; reflect on and learn from past experiences. Open your heart to higher visions. Read yesterday's advice. The Scorpio moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive at 6:52 p.m.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 12

The moon enters Sagittarius at 1:44 a.m., generating a lighter, brighter mood today and tomorrow. It is best to start new activities before 5:04 p.m., when the moon aligns with Jupiter, the planetary ruler of Sagittarius. On the other hand, don't go to extremes or make foolish promises or purchases. Use common sense. A lunar alignment to Mars at 5:28 p.m. warns you to drive defensively and be extra cautious when operating machinery. The remainder of the evening rates high for fun and games.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 13

It may be difficult to focus on practical matters and be productive today. Try to get work projects out of the way early in the day, so that you can spend extra time enjoying favorite sports and hobbies. The first quarter moon occurs at 2:08 p.m. A full moon is building up and will culminate September 21. The Sagittarius moon continues to generate an upbeat, adventurous mood. A lunar alignment to Uranus makes this a great evening for partying. Take a walk on the wild side.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 14

The planet Mercury takes the spotlight today. At 3:39 p.m. Mercury, standing at 13-degrees of Libra, begins retrograde travel until October 6. That means that you should avoid making major decisions, purchases, commitments in this period. The Sagittarius moon becomes inactive at 3:54 a.m. until 6:47 a.m., when a Capricorn moon takes over. If you have work projects to accomplish, this is a great weekend for it. Tackle jobs you have been putting off; you can get them out of the way.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 15

The moon continues to travel in pragmatic Capricorn throughout the day. Zero in on responsibilities you have taken on or commitments you have made to others. Now is the time to follow through. Plan a busy day. Don't sabotage your efforts by getting caught up in worries or fears. Focus on work or study projects. You can be most productive.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 16

The Capricorn moon aligns with the sun and becomes inactive at 1:58 a.m., making for a slow-starting morning. Take your time. Make up a list of things to do; tackle chores, errands, jobs that need a finishing touch. Influences begin to turn around at 2:54 p.m., when the moon enters innovative Aquarius. The remainder of the day is prime for participating in group activities, team sports, charitable drives, community endeavors.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17

An Aquarius moon sets the stage for an upbeat, social day. A lunar polarity to Jupiter this morning, however, warns you to know your limits. Don't overdo or overextend. Sleep on new ideas and don't make major commitments. The Aquarius moon forms easy contacts to Mercury in the afternoon and Pluto this evening. Planetary influences are prime for problem-solving, troubleshooting. Keep an open mind. Be willing to explore new ideas; be open to new experiences. You can cut through obstacles and find new inspiration and insights.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 18

Yesterday's planetary influences affect today. Avoid rigid time schedules; be flexible. An Aquarius moon may point you in directions you would not normally travel. This day is ideal for trying something new and different. Others may bring interesting or exciting news or ideas. Spend extra time on the information highway; chat, network, collaborate. Social activities get the green light this evening.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 19

The moon enters Pisces at 1:18 a.m., and the final windup to this month's full moon begins. The full moon will culminate Saturday, at the tail end of Pisces. Today a 90-degree alignment of Venus and Neptune warns you to stay alert and use common sense. Don't take anything at face value. Postpone making purchases or promises. On the other hand, this planetary combination is ideal for developing projects that require your imagination and creativity.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 20

Lunar alignments to Mars and Pluto this morning warn you to take it slow and easy. Drive defensively. Give greater attention to accuracy and details. Keep a cool head. The Pisces full moon continues to build throughout the day. Channel high energy constructively. You can make great headway developing creative and artistic projects. The stage is set for an exciting, 'anything can happen' kind of evening. Forget your troubles and go for the good times.

Sewer options on the table

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Jerusalem Road Estates? Remember them?

The controversial subdivision across from Straits Pond that took root more than six years ago still has to clear several hurdles before the first spade of dirt can be dug.

The proposed 25-home subdivision needs a place to dispose of the wastewater it will generate – a problem that needed to be resolved before the project could move ahead. The ledge and soil conditions on the 43-acre site make it infeasible for an on-site system, said Charles Humphreys, an attorney representing the developers.

The Sewer Commission has consistently taken the position it wants to reserve any available capacity that the town secured in an inter-municipal agreement with Hull back in the mid-90s for existing homes.

Schools to seek $99K

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The school department will ask the Nov. 16 Special Town Meeting to approve $99,000 worth of additional funding for contingencies that have presented themselves with the opening of school. That's on top of the $100,000, the school department was expected to ask for to fully fund its fiscal year 2003 school budget approved last spring's Annual Town Meeting.

"So if they vote no, that program goes away, the two health teachers go away."
— Business Manager Ivan Klimko

The large majority of the $99,000 will come in the form of a separate article for a capital expenditure to buy a new school bus for approximately $60,000. An additional $39,000 is now needed in order to fund the early retirement of custodian Kevin Soule ($7,000) and to save the elementary school health program ($32,000), which would

Avalon hosts walk-around

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

At first it took a little imagination.

A pot-hole ridden driveway, worn-out asphalt parking lot, rusty dumpsters and a dilapidated metal building with an 85,000 square-foot footprint, among other smaller, falling-down structures, disrupted the landscape where a 200-unit, luxury apartment complex is proposed.

But with the help of diagrams provided by engineer David Kelly, and a walk-around of the former Webb-Norfolk property led by Avalon's Scott Dale, the controversial project came into focus.

Five members of the Zoning Board of Appeals, which posted Saturday's 10 a.m. walk-around as a public meeting, and a handful of other town officials and interested citizens made the trek up the hill — across from the strip mall that houses Good Sport, Hancock Paint and Atlantic Bagel — for the tour, which was peppered by frequent stops and question-and-answer sessions.

Avalon has filed for a comprehensive permit for the project, which under Chapter 40B, the state affordable housing law, allows a developer to skirt local zoning in exchange for setting aside 20-25 percent of the units as affordable for those with moderate or low incomes. The Avalon project is proposed for commercially zoned land.

The 62-acre site is 8,000 feet wide, 3,000 feet deep and has

School department in the 'bus business'

Worries about double runs

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

If any of the other buses go down, or if a driver is sick, the department is forced to double route, which can make children late for school.

Buy or lease? Trade-in or new? Bluebird or Thomas Bus?

These questions are hardly the typical quandaries that face a school department. But since the department has taken the busing service in-house again, it has been the reality.

The town entered the school year with five buses to cover five runs, not to mention only four drivers for those buses. The latter problem forced the school to sign a three-month contract with Totman Enterprises, a bus company out of Scituate

Exacerbating the situation is the fact that one of the town's buses is already in the shop for major mechanical problems, so the count is now down to four buses. If any of the other buses go down, or if a driver is sick, the department is forced to double route, which can make children late for school. Since curriculum cannot be taught without the full complement of students, it affects everybody.

The school department is going to ask Special Town Meeting to approve a capital expenditure to purchase a new bus for around $60,000. But that doesn't necessarily solve the problem. The goal is to have six buses. One bus has what School Business Manager Ivan Klimko calls "proven mechanical problems," which wouldn't seem to bode well for its reliability. Also, next year, the school has to decide whether to purchase two 1999 Bluebird buses that it has been leasing. To do so would cost $21,000 apiece for a balloon payment. The committee could also turn those buses in and lease new buses for roughly $8,000 apiece for the upcoming fiscal year. There is also a pressing need to find a mechanic to service the buses, which could include attempting to involve the town's Department of Public Works.

Lurking in the dark is the issue

Focus on Route 3A

The Growth and Development Committee is holding the first in a series of focused Master Plan discussions to examine Route 3A development trends and opportunities on Monday, Sept. 30 at 7:30 p.m., Room 2B, Town Hall. Other topics explored will include train and traffic impacts, the need for improved design standards and the market potential for new commercial development.

A focused discussion on housing issues, including the development of an affordable housing strategy, is being planned for mid-October. A date and time for this meeting will be released shortly.

The Growth and Development Committee is charged with drafting a town master plan to provide a thoughtful and long term strategy to manage town growth. The ultimate goal of the Committee is to work with all town citizens to build consensus and help create an overall shared vision and strategy for the future of Cohasset.

For more information on the Route 3A or housing discussions, please contact Liz Harrington, Town Planner, at 781-383-3517.

Library marketing deal close to fruition

The town is progressing with its plan to market the Paul Pratt Library through a real estate agent.

"I've had good conversations with four realtors, and I'm going to have a tough decision to make," said Haddad. "I'd like to hire all four of them, but obviously I can't."

The town was forced to consider this option after putting the property out to bid twice, both times receiving bids less than the desired amount of $700,000. That amount has already been included in the budget for the renovation of the old Osgood School into the new Paul Pratt Library, which is already underway, making it important that the town reach that threshold.

Haddad expects the decision on which realtor will be hired to be made within the week.

New signs reserve spaces at Town Hall

At the suggestion of Selectman Merle Brown, Town Manager Mark Haddad had four signs installed at the parking spaces closest to Town Hall.

The signs says the spots are reserved for people conducting town business.

Haddad said with some church events and other activities on the common, during which some folks park at Town Hall, there haven't been any spaces available for residents with business at Town Hall.

He said the parking restriction is only in effect during regular business hours.

Bound Brook dredging

The proposed dredging of Bound Brook, near Beechwood Street has hit a snag, after the town of Scituate informed Town Manager Mark Haddad that it was not in its plans to dredge the portion of the brook that runs in Scituate.

"It doesn't make sense to do it unless Scituate does it as well," said Haddad. "Because if we do our end, where does the water go?"

Haddad and DPW Supt. Carl Sestito will still walk to length of the brook to determine access points and what can be done to clear the brook short of dredging.

One way on Elm Street?

The Board of Selectmen is considering a plan to test out Elm Street as a one way street on a temporary basis.

Town Manager Mark Haddad, Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan, and Craig Miller of the Waterfield Design Group will visit businesses in the area this week to get feedback on the plan.

"We're talking to people this week," said Haddad. "We're going to go up and say to the businesses, 'Hey, this is our idea, what do you think?"

The group will bring their report to the Board of Selectmen's next meeting.

Sewer plant bidding to start

The Board of Selectmen has reversed its decision to hold off on opening the bid process for the renovation of the Wastewater Treatment plant in the marsh of Elm Street.

The board was hesitant to send the project forward if the public had not had a chance to comment on the plan, but has changed its mind after it received several letters from residents in the area, informing them that they were well aware of the plan.

For the third season in a row, an "Evening of Song" will be presented at Norwell's Cushing Center on Friday October 4, and Saturday Oct. 5 at 7:30 P. M. Led by musical director and cast member Meri-Lee Mafera (Marshfield), "Evening of Song" will leave you humming some of your favorite tunes from a variety of decades including "Sentimental Journey," "Boogie Woogie Bugle Boy" and "In the Still of the Night" that will delight audiences of all ages. With a talented cast including Virginia Kulka (Norwell), Bill and Brenda McColgan (Whitman) and Michael Hammond (Holbrook), the show's seasoned performers will make for a great evening of entertainment.

Andy Mahony and Peter Kulka, both of Norwell are once again coupled as co-emcees, playing off one another with light comedy between numbers.

The five piece band will include Meri-Lee Mafera at the piano, Tim Maynard (Weymouth) on drums, Connie Reisdorf (Watertown) synthesizer, Brett Willmott (Weymouth) guitar, and Tony Sumbury (Watertown) on bass.

"Talent abounds in the past performances that we've had," says Mafera, "and you won't be disappointed this year either."

The show was originally conceived by Peter Kulka as a way to raise funds for some of the programs of Norwell's American Legion. All proceeds the first year went toward helping the Town of Norwell erect a Veteran's Monument and the common area. Last year's proceeds went to helping the American Red Cross and other noteworthy programs that the Legion sponsors.

This year the proceeds will be directed to additional needs such as hospice care for Legionnaires and continued work on the monument.

Herb Fredrickson, Commander of Norwell's Legion Post is very enthusiastic about the show. "Come on down and enjoy a great night of entertainment while giving support to our noteworthy causes. Everyone who has come to our other performances in the past have really had a great time."

"Each year our audiences keep getting larger," says Kulka. "Last year there was standing room only. When we sang our patriotic songs, there wasn't a dry eye in the audience."

Prices are $20 for general admittance, $15 for seniors and children under 12.

Avalon officials drive discussion on traffic issue

ZBA to hire its own consultant

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It seemed as though they were speaking a different language until traffic came up.

For the first part of Monday's hearing, representatives from AvalonBay went through a litany of bylaws that the project may need relief from, but had no specifics.

But the Zoning Board of Appeals wanted the specifics.

For example, how big are the proposed signs at the entrance and how much relief is needed?

"With each and every piece of relief you need, you need to let us know what you want and why, and with some modification, why you can't comply," chairman Woody Chittick said, adding the signs were just an example.

"Don't leave it up to guess (how big the signs would be)," he said.

Stay tuned – Avalon said it got the message and will be back with the details.

But what created a dialog that both sides could understand was a preliminary discussion over the traffic impacts of the proposed 200-unit luxury apartment complex.

Zoning Board members listened intently to the presentation, but reserved judgment until their own consultant conducts a study.

Chittick asked for a layman's explanation of what the project would add to an already "dicey traffic" situation on Route 3A and got his wish.

Richard Bryant of Rizzo Associates, a consultant who has worked with Avalon on eight projects, provided a brief overview of the existing conditions and a forecast of the future, incorporating the Avalon project and MBTA stations.

The site does not qualify for a traffic light because it would not meet the state's traffic density threshold.

He said the complex would provide a modest increase in traffic and the access is safe, meaning there are adequate site lines in both directions for motorists to get in and out safely. He also said 3A, a state highway, has adequate capacity and can accommodate the increase. The site does not qualify for a traffic light because it would not meet the state's traffic density threshold, Bryant said.

The speed limit on that section of 3A is 45 mph, and about 15 percent of the cars exceed that. About 1,630 vehicles pass by during the peak hour, which is 7:30-8:30 a.m., a number which is expected to decrease once the Greenbush line is built because some motorists will exit the highway for the stations in Cohasset and Scituate.

Bryant said the complex, which would accommodate 400 cars, would see a total of 125 trips in the peak hour, both on and off the site. If the area was developed for an industrial use, that number would be 215 trips, he said, or 800 if the acreage were fully developed.

Bryant said there could be as much as a 55- to 60-second wait during peak times to exit the site, but due to stacking several cars might be able to exist one right behind the other after a wait for gaps.

Chittick asked if Avalon would consider running a shuttle bus to the train station, but Bryant said ride-sharing would be more viable.

The Zoning Board also asked about sidewalks and a potential pedestrian bridge over 3A, in the interest of safety.

Avalon representatives said a shuttle bus is expensive to run and manage.

A pedestrian bridge would not be aesthetically pleasing and most would opt not to use it, Bryant, the traffic consultant said.

"Most people choose to cross at-grade rather than go up and down," Bryant said, unless it was a road like Storrow Drive in Boston.

The Zoning Board said the continuation of the hearing on Oct. 21 would focus on traffic and environmental issues.

The board also asked Avalon to provide actual numbers of schoolchildren in their other projects. One of the biggest town concerns is the potential for the project to flood the schools with kids. Avalon says it is willing to discuss the mix of one-, two-, and three-bedroom apartments to meet the town's needs. The company says complexes with more three-bedroom apartments usually have more children.

Avalon hosts walk-around at proposed developement site

300 feet of frontage along Route 3A, of that Avalon plans to develop 10-12 acres, which nearly matches what was developed by Norfolk Conveyor.

Most of the zoning board's questions centered around drainage and wastewater treatment issues, which will be dealt with in-depth as part of the ongoing public hearing for the project.

On the 3A side atop the hill, there is a clear view of the Atlantic Ocean and Minot Light — views that will no doubt be used as marketing points if the project is approved.

The opposite side of the site is heavily wooded and surrounded by Thayer and Whitney Woods, a nature reserve, which is owned by the Trustees of Reservations. To the north are the former Cohasset Heights Landfill, town water tank, and Massachusetts DPW garage.

"This is a gorgeous piece of land and it's important we put what we're doing in context here," said Dale who is vice president of development for Avalon.

Dale explained the apartment complex would look like a cul de sac and occupy almost the same area that was developed by Norfolk Conveyor, a manufacturer of airport conveyor systems that closed in the mid-90s. Avalon will take up about one-sixth, or 10-12 acres, of the property and about seven acres of that will be impervious.

"We'll be constructing over the previously disturbed part of the site," Dale said.

Kelly explained the storm-water drainage would be improved from what exists now. Currently water runs off a rusty, metal roof on the large Norfolk building, which would not allowed today under state environmental regulations. The Avalon complex will have sloped asphalt roofs. Storm-water runoff from the roofs will be collected in catch basins where it can infiltrate back into the ground, Kelly said.

There will also be pollution controls on the parking lot and blacktop areas, something that doesn't exist today at the site, Kelly said. The driveway and parking areas will have curbs and gutters for storm-water control.

Because the site is atop a hill, the apartment buildings around the perimeter of the complex will be terraced, so they have two stories in the front and three in the back. The buildings will be shingle-style with vinyl siding, which is very durable, Dale said.

The complex will have a total of 18 buildings. A variety of floor plans for one-, two- and three-bedroom units with square footage ranging from about 750 for a one-bedroom, to 1,500 for a three-bedroom unit with loft is planned. Avalon has made it known to the zoning board, it is open to discussing the mix of one-, two- and three-bedroom units to best serve Cohasset's housing needs.

The first thing people will see when they come up the driveway to the main entrance is the clubhouse, Dale said. The new driveway, which is the only access planned for the property, will be flattened out a little to a 10 percent grade (it is currently 12 percent).

After the walk-through, Dale invited the zoning board members and others in attendance to a tour of Hull Estates, an Avalon project whose architecture could be similar to what is planned for Cohasset.

Sewer options on the table

considerable expense, secured its own capacity from Hull.

Now, the developers are back before the Sewer Commission and presented three options Monday, plus a strong caveat – "if the answer is no to all three, we'll see you in court."

"We are trying to move forward with the project," said Humphreys, urging the board to make a quick decision about the sewer issue. The subdivision obtained approval with conditions from the Planning Board back in April 1999, a decision capped three years of negotiations.

The hearing process before the Conservation Commission has also begun. Developers need approval to disturb more wetlands than the town bylaw and state allows, and are on the Conservation Commission agenda Oct. 10.

Humphreys told the Sewer Commission that its position of reserving capacity for existing homes discriminates against owners of vacant land, who are still taxpayers. But still, Jerusalem Road Estates went directly to Hull and will pay $650,000 for 13,750 gallons per day, which is enough capacity to serve its proposed 25, five-bedroom homes. Also as part of the agreement, the developers will lay sewer main for two homes on Rocky Beach in Hull that are not connected to that town's sewer.

(Jerusalem Road in the Straits Pond area is part of the North Cohasset Sewer District. The town has a 30-year agreement with Hull for 80,000 gallons per day to serve homes in the district.)

Jerusalem Road Estates filed three applications with the Sewer Commission:

- Use its own capacity in Hull, but install a private sewer force main some 2,000 feet eastward to Atlantic Avenue in Hull, which would cost about $250,000 including connecting the two Hull homes.
- Use its own capacity in Hull, but connect to the town sewer line along Jerusalem Road that connects to Hull near West Corner, and pay the town $100,000 for the use of the pipe.
- Use some of the town's capacity and connect to town line along Jerusalem Road

"We're entitled to all three, I believe," said Humphreys, who said under state law a municipality cannot reserve sewer capacity for future use if there is a present need.

Humphreys explained if Jerusalem Road lays a private sewer main to Hull, the pipe would be maintained by the proposed homeowners association.

Town Counsel Paul DeRensis told the Sewer Commission he had concerns about a homeowners association, that at this point doesn't even exist, being charged with maintenance of a sewer pipe in a public way. He is concerned the town would ultimately be held responsible for possible pollution problems if such an association didn't agree to perform needed work.

"If a majority (of a homeowners association) doesn't want the road plowed, it doesn't get plowed," DeRensis said, adding some anecdotal experience he's had with municipalities having difficulties dealing with homeowners' associations.

"I'm sorry you've had that experience in life," Humphreys countered. "But modern homeowners associations have to do the work."

Developer Stephen Corey said if the town was concerned about maintenance, then he would consider deeding the sewer main to the town.

The Sewer Commission said it was upset that Jerusalem Road Estates paid top dollar for Hull capacity, which the town would like to have more of. Commissioners said they've been "stonewalled" by Hull in their efforts to seek more capacity.

But Corey said Cohasset "slammed the door in our face" when it initially applied to connect to the North Cohasset Sewer District.

"It wasn't our choice to go to Hull, you forced us to go to Hull," he said.

There was also some discussion about how much of the 80,000 gallons per day, that Cohasset has from Hull, is not being used. The figures that Humphreys presented show the town has available capacity, but sewer commissioners want to do their own research.

But Corey said he didn't want to fight the battle over capacity. He said Jerusalem Road Estates either needs a street opening permit to install pipe to connect to Hull or permission to connect to the existing line.

Humphreys warned if the developers take the issue to court and it is determined the town has capacity, other landowners may "intervene" in the lawsuit and jump on board.

"It would be open season on open lots," he said.

The town is still under a court order to solve its wastewater problems and as a result, has expanded the Central Cohasset Sewer District that connects to the town plant on Elm Street, in addition to creating the North Cohasset Sewer District that is connected to Hull.

The Sewer Commission did not reject the Jerusalem Road Estates applications out of hand. Commissioners said they wanted to make sure the town didn't jeopardize the agreement with the state before making a decision, and took the matter under advisement.

Cultural council grants available

The Cohasset Cultural Council announced Oct. 15 is the deadline for organizations and individuals to apply for grants to support cultural activities in the community. Cohasset Cultural Council receives money each year from the Massachusetts Cultural Council (MCC), a state agency.

According to Council spokesperson Diane Kennedy, these grants can be used to support a variety of artistic and cultural projects that benefit citizens in Cohasset — including exhibits, festivals, short-term artist residencies or performances in schools, as well as cultural workshops and lectures.

Kennedy also says that the Cohasset Cultural Council will entertain funding proposals from schools and youth groups through the PASS Program, a ticket subsidy program for school-age children that allows them to attend a Massachusetts-based cultural event.

These grants can be used to support a variety of artistic and cultural projects that benefit citizens in Cohasset.

Application forms and additional information about the Local Cultural Council Program are available on the MCC Web site at masculturalcouncil.org/lcc-grants.html. Contact Diane Kennedy, Chair, Cohasset Cultural Council at 781-383-1304 to learn more about available grants.

The Local Cultural Council Program, of which Cohasset Cultural Council is a part, comprises a network of 335 councils across the state. It is the second largest program of the MCC. MCC provides allocations to each LCC annually to support cultural activities in every city and town in Massachusetts. This is the largest program of its kind in the United States.

Schools seek new bus, also want to save health program have been cut after the state cancelled the grant that funded the positions.

The School Committee points to the fact that all of the costs could not have been anticipated.

Just prior to the start of school, the district learned it would have to operate its own busing system. (See accompanying article).

"We need the bus," said Business Manager Ivan Klimko, who is running the transportation system. "We only have five buses now and we have five runs in the morning (for each school). So any time there is a mechanical problem with the bus, we don't have enough buses and there is a liability there."

When the school department last operated the buses, it owned six buses, but one was lost in an accident three years ago. The was no need for a spare the last two years, because Ingle Bus Services of Hanover, which was operating the town's buses, would provide one of his own in case of a problem.

Ingle decided not to renew the contract this year and the town did not receive any bids from private vendors to operate the service, largely, because the town is so small.

Michael Gill, the school health director, approached the School Committee about saving the elementary healt program earlier this year, and the committee agreed to do so temporarily, so long as Town Meeting approved the added $32,000 for this year.

"If the good citizens of Cohasset say no, then we are going to have to make up whatever it has cost us thus far in the budget, but not the full $32,000," said Business Manager Ivan Klimko. "So if they vote no, that program goes away, the two health teachers go away."

No guarantees were made for this year or beyond, but Gill is diligently working to find a replacement funding source. For the School Committee it was a low-risk way to attempt to save the program.

"That health program is a major part of the curriculum throughout the district," said Vice Chairman Chartis Tebbetts. "We had assumed that we would be getting that grant to pay for those teachers."

The Board must also seek $7,000 to fund the early retirement of custodian Kevin Soule. Soule had not been originally included in the early retirement program, but the School Committee reversed its position and asked the Board of Selectmen to include him.

"With the retirement, we didn't know it was coming," said Klimko. "They just changed those laws. We have one of the oldest workers in town, and he has the most seniority, so where do you get that money, well, we're going to go to Town Meeting."

Supt. Edward Malvey said that if the committee asked him to, he would find that $7,000 (in the event Town Meeting decided not to fund it), but that it would require some cutting. According to Malvey, there simply isn't any "wiggle" room in the budget.

"That's the way I am analyzing it right now," said Malvey. "Seven or eight months down the road, we might be in a different position if we are able to free up some of that $100,000, but right now it is all committed."

School department in the 'bus business'

regarding the amount of students to be transported. It hasn't happened, and it may not, but if all the schoolchildren in Cohasset were to ride the bus to school in the morning, there would not be enough space on the buses. Drivers have been instructed to make a second trip should that occur, and would, under no circumstances, overload the buses.

While many of those issue are decisions that have not presented themselves, the mechanical problems already have.

Just last week, a bus wouldn't start in the morning due to a battery problem. The issue was resolved in time for the afternoon runs, but it forced the department to scramble for the morning routes.

"(Last week) is proof of the need," said Klimko, who is responsible for the day-to-day running of the busing operation. "You have a bus that just doesn't start in the morning. We had to double up and that causes kids to sometimes be a little later getting to school, so we lose instructional time. It's just not acceptable."

The town used to have six buses, but lost one to an accident a few years back. Having a spare bus wasn't a big issue when a large bus company was in charge of operation.

"Steve Ingle refused to take the third year of our contract," said Klimko. "He was running our (town-owned) buses, but whenever we needed an extra bus, we just had one from his company to make the runs. Now, we don't have that convenience."

The department is hoping that the Special Town Meeting appropriation will prove to be the salve that sooths the problem. It is also confident that things will smooth out as the department gets used to being "in the bus business" once again.

"Hopefully (the temporary contract with Totman) will get us to town meeting and that is the way we are getting our sixth bus now," said Klimko. "We're having one worked on right now, we're kind of ad-libbing until then."

Klimko also pointed out that as the season turns, the lack of a spare bus may become more noticeable.

"It's somewhat doable in September," said Klimko. "But how long can you stand out there in the winter waiting for a bus to make a double run?"

Arts and crafts

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept telephone registrations for the grades K-Three Arts and Crafts programs by calling 781-383-4109.

Arts and Crafts for grades K-Three will be held from 3-4:30 p.m. on Mondays and will be held t the Joseph P. Osgood School.

The program will be five weeks in duration, costing $42 per child. Programs are scheduled to begin Monday, Oct. 21, continuing through Nov. 25. The class will not meet on Monday, Nov. 11, Veterans Day.

Lauren Albanese shines at American Academy of Ballet

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

BUNDLE OF JOY

I received a wonderful message from Heidi (Smith) Daileader, formerly of Hingham. The note reads "My husband John and I welcomed our second child, Katherine Mary, on Sept. 4. She was 7 pounds 13 ounces and arrived just after midnight, right on her due date. Big brother Matthew is excited to show Kate the ropes now that we're back home in upstate New York. She is the second grandchild of proud grandparents Judy and Lee Peacock of Hingham, Russ and Susan Smith of Cohasset and #17 for Bob and Marion Daileader of Clifton Park, N.Y."

Thank Heavens For Little Girls..... Congratulations to all of you. Uncle Adam and Auntie Emma are so excited about this new little lady, I am sure!

TOP BALLERINA

Lauren Albanese, of Cohasset, attended the American Academy of Ballet in New York for three weeks this summer. Lauren began dancing each day at 9 a.m.,

with classes in intensive technique, Classical ballet, Pointe, Pas de Deux, Repertoire, and Variations. Lauren ended her stay with the A.A.B. with a grand performance and an evening of competition in the Performance Awards. The Performance Awards Program is the unique concept of the American Academy of Ballet. The program is taught by more than 100 teachers throughout the United States, as well as by teachers in Greece, Holland, Belgium, the Philippines, Japan, South Africa, the Bahamas and Spain. The beautifully choreographed dances give students an opportunity to dance a solo before an audience which generates excitement for the event.

Lauren brought home a gold medal in the Performance Awards. Lauren has performed with the Boston Ballet at the Wang Center for the Performing Arts in professional ballets, including The Nutcracker, for four years, The Sleeping Beauty, and A Midsummer Nights Dream. Lauren has been a student at The Boston Ballet Center for Dance Education for the past nine years. She is 12 years old.

BEYOND TOLERANCE

The Cohasset Diversity Committee is sponsoring the program 'Beyond Tolerance' at Cohasset Middle High School on Monday evening, Sept. 30. The program begins at 7:30 p.m. and will be held in the Cohasset Middle High School's new cafeteria. The guest speaker will be Victor Kazanjian, Dean of Religious and Spiritual Life and Co-Director of the Peace & Justice Studies Program at Wellesley College. Dean Kazanjian will discuss moving beyond the destructive forces of intolerance which have marked so much of human history, and even moving beyond the limits of tolerance, which often acts as a state of suspended ignorance, to that place we will ultimately discover where all human beings are inextricably bound together in a global web of interdependence. Please join the Cohasset Diversity Committee for this insightful program. For more information, please call Connie Afshar at 781 383 6006.

HANDS-ON HARBOR FUN

Calling all Cohasset kids and their families! Please plan to stop by the new "Cohasset Center for Student Coastal Research" on the Harbor, at the end of Parker Avenue on Saturday Sept. 28 from 11am-3pm. The New England Aquarium will have touch tanks for some hands-on fun from 11a.m.-1p.m., you will be able to hear and see about a day in the life of a lobsterman.....and there will be a free lunch cookout!! Find out how you can get involved in future CCSCR classes and events! Want to help out? Please phone Susan Galligan 383-0765. Hope to see you there :)

A SPECIAL EVENING

Come party so they can play! The playground fundraising committee of the South Shore Community Center Nursery School cordially invites all to a special evening of cocktails, hors d'oeuvres, dancing and a silent auction. Catering is provided by Tony Ambrose of Ambrosia on Huntington in Boston. Saturday, Oct. 19 at 7 p.m. Sons of Italy Hall in Hingham. Cost is $50 per person. RSVP to Linda Kleir at 781-383-6061.

GO BLUE!

Calling all CHS football fans! It's football season again, and we need our fans to come out in full force this Friday night at 7 on Alumni Field. CHS is playing a Division 1 team (we are Division 5), North Quincy. We will need the fans' support to keep the guys fired up. We'll never forget the way the town turned out to cheer on the team in its win over Abington, the favored team. This is a great way to spend a Friday evening with friends and family and help to cheer on a talented team on to victory. Go Blue, Go White!

Boston Breakers' McCann at boosters' pancake breakfast

PRO SOCCER PLAYER

The Soccer Boosters Club's annual Pancake Breakfast is being held on Sunday, Oct. 6 from 8 am-12 p.m.. This years breakfast will feature an appearance by Christine McCann of the women's professional soccer team, the Boston Breakers. Christine will be at the high school cafeteria to sign autographs from 10-11 a.m. Your ticket will also enter you in this year's Raffle. Prizes include tickets to a Bruins and a Celtics game, gift certificates to several local restaurants and numerous other items. Proceeds from the breakfast support our High School soccer teams. Tickets ($5 per person) are available in advance from any middle or high school soccer player or by calling Debbie Shadd at 383-1624.

TRINITY SOCCER STAR

Senior soccer tri-captain forward Morgan Sandell of Cohasset netted the first Trinity goal in the college's season-opening 2-1 victory against rival Bates College on Sept. 7. Morgan followed that up with Trinity's lone goal in its 1-1 tie with Middlebury on Sept. 14. Morgan was named to the NESCAC honor roll for scoring a goal in each of Trinity's first two games. This young man is certainly making a name for himself, I am sure we will hear a lot more about Morgan in the future.

LUNCHTIME SPEAKER

Lunchtime Speaker Series continues on Friday Oct. 4 from noon to 1p.m. at the South Shore Art Center. Professional image consultant, wardrobe manager and personal shopper, Julie Foley, will be our next guest at the Social Service League sponsored speaker series. Ms. Foley speaks to groups nationally and has been featured in Vogue. Her array of services helps her clients to look and feel their best by analyzing personal color, body type and lifestyle. Julie will introduce the five looks of lifestyle, social/casual, work, formal and recreation. Her array of services also include closet clutter control and wardrobe makeovers. Her services have been offered as fun gifts and her presentation should make for an entertaining lunch hour. Free and open to all. For more info call 781-383-0771.

HARVEST SUPPER

The Beechwood Congregational Church is holding its Harvest Supper on Thursday evening, Oct. 24 at 6:30. Ham, green beans, beets, mashed potatoes, coleslaw, dessert and a beverage will be served. Following dinner, harvest items will be auctioned off. Tickets are $8 for adults and $4 for children. Reserve your tickets by calling 781-383-1298.

RENSSELAER MEDALLIST

Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute announced that Elizabeth Reynolds of Cohasset was this year's honoree at Cohasset High School. The Rensselaer Medal, the oldest prize of its kind in the United States is awarded at 2,700 secondary schools throughout North America, Latin America, Europe and Asia. This award is given to students who have distinguished themselves in mathematics and science. To be honored with the Rensselaer Medal, a student must be a member of the junior class and the high school's single most promising science and math student. Each medallist who is accepted and subsequently enrolls at Rensselaer receives the scholarship of $40,000, payable in four yearly awards of $10,000 each. Congratulations Elizabeth!

That is all for this week, Cohasset. Please make a huge effort to get me all of your news, events and information BY or BEFORE Mondays at noon! Although writing this column is a very fun and enjoyable part of my week, it is one of many jobs that I do. When I get things thrown my way late Monday and Tuesday, it makes it very difficult for me to add or change the column in time for my deadline to the Mariner. Thank you in advance for keeping this in mind, it is a very huge help!

All photos should be dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street in the Village no later than Monday afternoons. Please put them in an envelope marked "Around Town, Cohasset, Mary Ford." Make sure to send all information and stories relating to that photo to me for the column.

Standing up against hate

Take a Stand in the Sand to spell out "The South Shore Is No Place For Hate" in a human letter chain Oct. 6, 12-4 p.m., on Nantasket Beach at the Mary Jeanette Murray Bathhouse in Hull. A coalition of 13 South Shore No Place For Hate communities is hosting the free event which promotes diversity and respect for difference. The free event, which runs till 4 p.m., will feature live music, a hip-hop dance troupe, free refreshments and other surprises. For information, call Sumner Goldberg, Hull NPFH chairman at Hull Town Hall, 781-925-0305. Or members of the Cohasset Diversity/No Place for Hate Committee — Susan Etkind (781-383-6602), or Chartis Tebbetts (781-383-1662).

The 13 community-members of the South Shore NPFH Coalition are: Brockton, Cohasset, Duxbury, Hingham, Hull, Marshfield, Milton, Norwell, Plymouth, Quincy, Scituate, Sharon and Stoughton.

Image coach is next speaker

The "Lunchtime Speaker Series" continues on Oct. 4 from noon to 1p.m. at the South Shore Art Center will be Julie Foley, an image coach, wardrobe manager and personal shopper that help women look and feel their best by utilizing personal body types, hair color and complexions.

Foley helps to balance personal lifestyle that enhances self esteem and makes her clients feel their very best. As a member of The New England Association of Image Consultants, Foley has been featured in "Vogue" and "Who's Who in Women's Business." Please feel free to bring your lunch to the South Shore Art Center. Question and answer session after her presentation, admission is free, open to all. For more info call Cohasset Social Service League 781-383-0771.

Election 2002

Bradley takes challenges head-on

Seeks reelection; points to record

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

There he was in 1991, future state representative Garrett Bradley standing ready on the Boston College 30-yard line preparing himself to run downfield on the suicide mission that is otherwise known as kickoff coverage.

At this point, it is best to let Bradley, the Third Plymouth District state representative for the past two years, recount the story – at least the parts of that story which he can remember.

"So it was against Georgia Tech, the second game of the year, that I was called upon to go in for the first time on the field with the special teams," said Bradley. "And I ran, on kickoff, I don't know about 60-65 yards full speed and this outside linebacker for Georgia Tech took two steps forward and leveled me."

Besides a headache, the play earned him a regular position on the Boston College football team's special teams. Coach Tom Coughlin, now the coach of the NFL's Jacksonville Jaguars, liked what he saw in the former walk-on and found a place for him on special teams.

"Coughlin was watching on film, and here I am one of the slower guys on the team, and I am the first one downfield," said Bradley (Note: It's unclear whether this memory is from the actual day or from viewing the tape after The Hit). "So he said, 'Well if that guy works that hard on the field, I want him."

That play led to an opportunity to travel with the team to Penn State, Syracuse and Temple, as well as to a varsity letter.

While exploits on the gridiron are far from legislative battles, the key component of the Hingham native's success was – and still is – hard work.

People may feel free to disagree with his stance on the issues, or his party affiliation, but no one can question the man's dedication to working for what he believes in.

State Sen. Bob Hedlund (a Republican) stopped by the Mariner office and noted that Bradley was practically wearing himself thin by making appearances as every event possible (Bradley – "He just gets mad, because he knows if I am going somewhere, he needs to be there"). Still hard work is a trait that was instilled in Bradley as a child and reinforced by his time with Coughlin.

> "The job is what I had hoped it would be when I ran for office, namely, that one representative can make a difference."
> — State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham

"Coughlin used to teach us that it's the little things, and this is the reason that most of the time I am early to stuff," said Bradley. "He used to say, that 'If you are late to a meeting, you run at 6 a.m., and the meeting begins when I enter the room, and I'm always five minutes early.'"

Punishment consisted of "running until you dropped" according to Bradley, a harsh penalty that filled the team meeting room 10 minutes prior to the "official" meeting time everyday, with all parties looking straight ahead with their feet on the floor.

The little things still matter to the former Plymouth County Prosecutor, who lives in Hingham with his wife Heather and two young daughters. During a Friday morning tour of the Statehouse, which he graciously provided, he would not set foot into the meeting room for the House of Representatives.

"I don't have a tie on, and I don't enter that room unless I have a tie on," said Bradley.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, campaigns outside the Scituate Polls at the state primary last week. On Jan. 1, North Scituate becomes part of the Third Plymouth District that also includes Hingham, Hull and Cohasset.

It is those little things that have made the Bradley a rare Triple Eagle (after attending Hingham Public Schools until the eighth grade, he pulled off a trifecta, attending BC High, Boston College, and BC Law School).

"If you read in the (State) Constitution what the job of State representative is, it is to be closest legislative body to the people," said Bradley. "And you can't do that by sitting at the State House 24-7 and not going to things."

After two years, Bradley says that the job of state representative has been mostly what he expected.

"The job is what I had hoped it would be when I ran for office, namely, that one representative can make a difference," said Bradley. "One representative voting as his district wants, can make a difference, and I have found that that is the case."

Bradley has established a reputation for challenging party leadership on several issues including Chapter 40B, cutbacks in school building assistance funding, and the housing bond bill of last year. Though he is satisfied he is making a difference, he has been sometime frustrated with the pace of the process, which he points out is just the nature of the legislative process at this point in time.

"The level of debate was not what I thought it would be," said Bradley. "I would like to see more debate on the issues."

Bradley believes that there is a change needed up on Beacon Hill, but that he is a part of the solution, not the problem.

"Years ago it was 'We need more Democrats,' now it is 'We need more Republicans,'" said Bradley. "That's not what it is about. It is not about sending politicians up here. It is about sending people here, whoever they may be, male, female, Republican, Democrat, who are going to vote their district, and that is how you are going to reform Beacon Hill."

Bradley feels free to challenge party leadership, but not just to say he did it ("I have nothing personal against the leadership"). He feels that his responsibility is to his district, and that they will be the final arbiters of the job he has done.

"If you come up here and you are a career politician, you want to vote in a way that will get you back here and get you in with leadership, and that is not what I am here to do," said Bradley who doesn't see himself occupying his current position 20 or 30 years from now. "I am here, because I grew up in my community and I love my community. I want to make a difference and I think I can."

As to those, who would say that it was safe for him to vote against his party on an issue to placate his district, knowing that the vote would still pass along party lines, Bradley is almost offended.

"It's not always about winning, its about saying, 'I'm not afraid to do this,' and showing others that it is OK to challenge leadership, it's healthy to challenge leadership," said Bradley pointing to one of the last votes he participated in. "The vote on the housing bond bill was very indicative of people saying 'Hey, you know what, they're right. They are standing up and saying that this is a bad bill that doesn't go far enough and that the leadership in the Conference Committee didn't do their job, and we're going to go with them."

For Bradley, the election boils down to his track record.

"This election is basically, 'Did I do the job I was sent here to do?'" said Bradley. "If I have, I would ask people to vote for me again, and if I haven't I can understand people not voting for me."

Nathaniel Palmer: Problem solver from the start

Says business approach needed at the Statehouse

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

At age13, Nathaniel Palmer, knew something was wrong.

As his peers in Santa Barbara, Calif. spent their time skateboarding, Palmer was opening his first small business.

It was a only a minor venture, known as "Make Your Mom Proud," but for the man who at 32 is now challenging Garrett Bradley for the Third Plymouth District seat in the state's House of Representatives, it began a lifelong fascination with business and problem solving.

"If you wanted to send your mother flowers, you'd give me the note, and I'd have it transcribed in calligraphy," said Palmer. "It would be attached to a single rose with a bit of trimming on it, and I'd have some young, handsome guys in suits who would go knock on the door and deliver it to her."

It was, admittedly, small potatoes, but the feeling of successfully filling a need stuck with Palmer.

"That was pretty rewarding," said Palmer. "It didn't solve any major problems, but it was pretty successful and everybody had a lot of fun."

For Palmer, California was a bit too slow paced. It wasn't until he arrived in Massachusetts that he felt comfortable.

"I always felt a little bit out of place in California," said Palmer, discounting his sojourn on the West Coast as a cruel trick of fate. "I was a little bit intense for people out there, but when I came here, it all made sense."

So, after graduating Santa Barbara High School and attending a year of community college in California, Palmer packed his bag and followed the voice calling in his head – 'Go East Young Man!' With only his car, which was filled with his worldly possessions, and enough money for about one semester, Palmer headed to the Boston area to attend Babson College. After arriving, he decided that he was interested in the business of technology and ended up attending Bentley College where he graduated in 2 fi years (thanks in part to the one semester of junior college in California).

"The timing is right in that, while I always wanted to serve in this role, I didn't want to do it until I had achieved something in the private sector."
— Nathaniel Palmer, Republican candidate

But money, presented a problem, and Palmer approached it the same way he always had – in search of a solution. He had met his future wife ("I was very taken with her and I wanted to give her the best possible treatment') and needed a way to ensure he enough money in order to court her effectively. He also needed a computer. Again, opportunity presented itself.

He called IBM to ask about a program in which the company sold computers to students for about 40 percent of the market rate. But the representative he spoke with told him he couldn't sell him one because there wasn't a sales representative in the area.

"I'll tell you what," Palmer told IBM. "If I open the area for you, will you give me a computer?"

Eventually, IBM agreed, which led to a job with the company for about a year. It ended, when, despite Palmer reaching a tentative multi-million dollar agreement with Bentley to exclusively market IBM computers on campus, IBM cut the student sales program.

Bradley, who also worked as a Resident Assistant at Bentley (which paid for his room and board), decided to leave the company.

He made a phone call to Delphi Group, after looking its CEO up in the Bentley Alumni Directory and offered to work for free. He is now part-owner of that company, and has watched the company grow from three people when he joined, to a high of 100 employees.

The real question is why? Why leave a secure job in the private sector for a position in government?

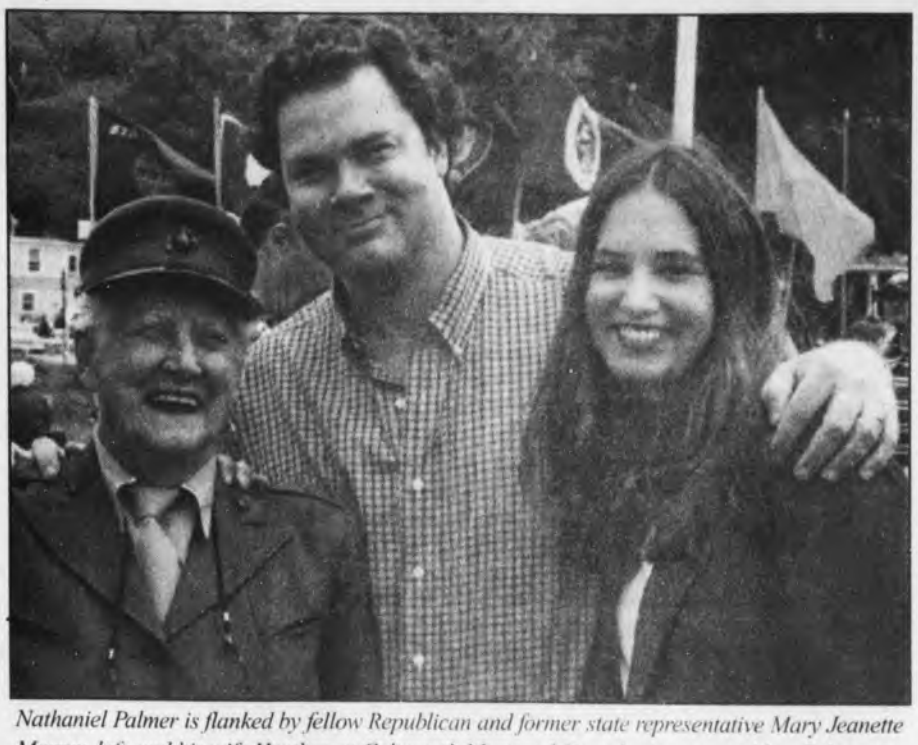
"That's a fair question, and more often than not it is asked that way," said Palmer. "It's asked in almost an incredulous way – 'Why would you do this?'"

Palmer says that the reason is part a sense of duty and part a calling. Despite his relative inexperience in the political world (he served two terms as an elected member of the Milton Housing Authority), he never strayed too far from politics.

"The timing is right in that, while I always wanted to serve in this role, I didn't want to do it until I had achieved something in the private sector," said Palmer. "I didn't want to seek a position of this magnitude until I had gone through the process of running a business, knowing what is entailed in that, and being responsible for several people's livelihood."

It is exactly that – creating jobs for others – that Palmer says truly drives him.

"I remember one of the first times when somebody that I hired when he was single, who was then a young guy right out of school, got married, bought a home, had his first child and was having his second child," said Palmer. "It finally hit me that, 'Hey, I have a lot of responsibility here.'"



Nathaniel Palmer is flanked by fellow Republican and former state representative Mary Jeanette Murray, left, and his wife Heather, at Cohasset's Memorial Day observances in May. Palmer is the Republican candidate for the Third Plymouth District.

Palmer called that responsibility both "humbling and empowering," and said it was a perspective he thinks is sorely lacking on the political scene.

"If you haven't gone through that (the process of operating a business), you can't have that perspective," said Palmer. "Most on Beacon Hill don't come from that background."

When the possibility of becoming directly involved in the process was floated by his political friends, Palmer was intrigued.

"The time is also right from the standpoint of the opportunity as well as the risk of not realizing that opportunity," said Palmer. "The biggest issues are around education and providing services to the community, especially to those that are most vulnerable and are in need of state assistance."

Palmer is also extremely displeased with Chapter 40B, and its impact on the communities in his area. He also feels that the problems that have presented themselves are the result of a lack of foresight in general by the legislative body.

"Stewardship at the state-level is going to be critical more than ever," said Palmer. "Two years ago, it was not an issue. The economy was peaking. We were at a point where the attitude in the legislature among most was 'How can we spend this money,' not 'What can we do to make sure that the economy stays strong?'"

Palmer would rectify the situation by concentrating on creating jobs on the South Shore, by encouraging the appropriate businesses to settle here, namely businesses whose infrastructure would fit into the existing landscape.

"There is a tremendous opportunity here," said Palmer. "The intellectual power of the residents here, the resources, the attractiveness of the area. All of these present a great opportunity for local economic development."

Such an opportunity is exactly what excites Palmer. In short, he is very plainly a problem-solving junkie.

"Most people would say 'I don't want to have anything to do with (the problems on Beacon Hill)," said Palmer. "But when I look at a problem, I think, 'What can I do to change it."

Mackerel raising

Weather permitting, the mackerel weathervane, so long a feature atop the Paul Pratt Memorial Library building, will be installed atop the new cupola on the new library being constructed in the old Osgood School at noon on Friday.

Thanks to Bill Cavanaro of Cohasset Collision and David Hassan of Hassan Woodcarving and Sign Company, the 100-year-old weathervane looks as good as new.

Cohasset Collision removed the dents in the copper mackerel and balls, replaced the copper pole, and fixed the inner workings. Hassan Sign sanded the structure down, painted on primer, sealer and painstakingly applied the 23-carat gold leaf.

What many residents may not know is the mackerel is a symbol of the town's rich past. A fleet of 50 mackerel schooners once graced Cohasset Harbor with a catch that was second to none.

According to town historian David Wadsworth, mackerel fishing hit its peak just before the Civil War, and Cohasset briefly ranked as the largest fishing port in terms of catch.

Vessels sailed in Canadian waters and returned to Cohasset Harbor with their bounty which spawned many other businesses that brought prosperity to the town.

Rope makers, wood carvers, shipbuilders and the salt industry all flourished.

But as the mackerel schools depleted and engine-powered vessels arrived – the regal majesty of the two-masted fishing schooner in Cohasset waters was relegated to the pages of the town's history books.

One reason for the industry decline, according to Wadsworth, was small ports like Cohasset didn't make the transition from sailing to the new engine-powered ships.

So there atop the 1903 Pratt library on South Main Street, the mackerel was positioned for nearly a century alerting us to wind direction, with most of us taking little note.

Edward Nichols, who designed the Paul Pratt building, said about the weathervane in one of the town's history books:

"The roof is of copper and is crowned by an octagonal cupola terminated by a vane in the form of a mackerel – typical of Cohasset's former industry."

But townspeople and library trustees made sure Cohasset's library didn't become obsolete like the mackerel sailing ships.

As the town embarks on the 21st century, the mackerel has again become a symbol – not of the past but of the future.

The weathervane will proudly sit atop a new town library on Ripley Road, which will feature all the comforts of the venerable old building, but have the room for all the modernization that libraries of today need to keep up with the Information Age.

AvalonBay project is not a done deal

TO THE EDITOR:

Is Cohasset prepared to add 700 to 800 residents to our current population of 7045 in one year's time? Is our school system prepared for an additional 100 plus children? Can 3A accommodate an additional 400 cars turning on and off 3 to 4 times daily? Can you afford an increase in your taxes?

AvalonBay's development would create such questions while it makes only a small contribution towards our 40B, affordable housing requirement. Since only 50 out of the 254 units of this project will be truly affordable, Cohasset will have to continue to grow rapidly over the next several years to meet the state's affordable housing requirement.

Cohasset Action was formed to encourage the town to put together a plan of affordable and senior housing that fits our projected growth. Contrary to some reports you may be hearing, the AvalonBay development is not a done deal there are things we can do as a community. We need help by addressing concerns such as health, safety and environmental impacts. We need to gain support from citizens and to hire appropriate consultants to research and evaluate the facts in the AvalonBay proposal.

If you would like to join in our efforts to save Cohasset please attend our next meeting Oct. 1, 7:30p.m. at Town Hall or send a donation to Cohasset Action PO Box 35, Cohasset MA.

Best chance to stop Greenbush

TO THE EDITOR:

When I first became involved in the Greenbush resistance, an acquaintance summed up his reaction to the rail restoration in one word: "Politicians."

Several articles in last week's (Cohasset Mariner) served as a reminder of just how politically tainted Greenbush is, and I compliment Mary Ford for revealing some of the shenanigans that take place on Beacon Hill under the guise of representative government. Hopefully residents will be sufficiently angry to continue to support those of us who are doing battle with the MBTA over Greenbush.

There's another reason why I think residents should support AfTA and that is because of the tremendous personal effort John Bewick has made and continues to make on our behalf.

John is a most remarkable public servant. I have known him for more than 20 years, even prior to his becoming Secretary of Environmental Affairs in the King administration. And I was more than thrilled when Martha Reardon approached me at a Greenbush meeting several years ago and said she had met a friend of mine named John Bewick. Within months they were married and it wasn't long before John, as a new resident of Hingham, got embroiled in the Greenbush controversy.

When Advocates for Transportation Alternatives (AfTA) was formed in the wake of the Hingham selectmen's tunnel deal with the MBTA, John became its president and was quick to turn the "anti"-Greenbush message into a set of positives: the "alternatives" to Greenbush.

John brought the experienced environmental law firm, Anderson and Kreiger, into the equation to map out a legal strategy. He was also instrumental in identifying the audience that AfTA needed to appeal to.

One of John's first presentations was to the Massachusetts Taxpayer's Foundation, a group that, in concert with the Pioneer Institute, recently published a scathing report on MBTA fiscal irresponsibility. The study claimed that the MBTA could "afford Greenbush and little else" and that much needed maintenance and modernization would go unfunded if Greenbush were to be built. How much John's presentation influenced the report's conclusions is not known, but he was right on target with his audience.

In the ensuing months John gave unsparingly of himself to help advance the AfTA message. He contended that, among other negatives, at $257,000 per new rider, Greenbush was profligate spending, especially during these tough economic times.

With the help of Sen. Bob Hedlund and Rep. Garrett Bradley, John personally made numerous presentations to state legislators. And it was, as a result of John's efforts and the threat of legal challenge, that the MBTA and its friends on Beacon Hill were compelled to bury the Article 97 issue deep within the "midnight legislation" referred to in last week's paper.

John has also made sure that the Greenbush profligate spending issue is in front of the gubernatorial candidates at a time when campaign issues are being carefully crafted. Mitt Romney's Commuter Bill of Rights is very consistent with John's contention that the money earmarked for Greenbush is being spent in the wrong place when far more effective public transit projects are in need of funding. The termination clauses in the MBTA Greenbush contract allow the project to be cancelled almost at will should a new fiscally responsible governor decide to reorder MBTA priorities. It's an important and timely card to play and John is making a concerted effort to play it.

John recently met with the Massachusetts Association of Conservation Commissions to rally support for the Conservation Commissions of Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate. The local CCs are demanding more information from the MBTA in order to properly perform their duties of protecting the local environment against the vagaries of Greenbush. Much of the information the CCs seek is unavailable since Greenbush, as a design build project, has not been fully designed. It is clear that the MBTA would like it to stay that way. The less information to scrutinize by those pesky CCs the better.

These are just a few of the initiatives John has undertaken since moving to Hingham only four years ago. They do not include the many hours spent on the phone garnering support, organizing fund raising efforts (approximately $80,000 to date) and meeting with South Shore citizens groups opposed to Greenbush. Thanks to his efforts, the Greenbush opposition is alive and well and about to challenge the MBTA on its most crucial permitting application to date: a variance to the Wetlands Act.

In seeking financial support, John has often referred to AfTA as the "last" chance to stop Greenbush. I would put it slightly differently: Under John Bewic'◊s guidance, I believe AfTA is one of the "best" chances we have ever had to stop Greenbush.

I urge all South Shore residents to support AfTA in its continuing litigation against the MBTA.

Why you should vote

TO THE EDITOR:

The Hingham League of Women Voters want to thank all the candidates for running for election in last week's primary. Congratulations to the winners. Cohasset had about a 30 percent voter turnout. We are very pleased with that number though it is a shame that so many Americans do not bother to vote when there are new democracies in the world that have over 90 percent turnout, and too many people who have no voting rights at all.

For all the people who don't bother to vote, they are missing out on a great thing. Government at all levels has a big effect on our lives. Voting is a way to say what is important to you and say it straight to the politicians and government officials. Politicians pay attention to who votes. If your candidate does not win, it still shows that there was support for another point of view.

Young people and new US citizens have not voted in high numbers in recent elections, so many youth issues,(example; college loan programs) are not addressed by some politicians. This needs to change and your choice of one politician over another does make a difference on issues that affect your lives. Most Americans know that government can make a difference in their lives. Voting gives you a feeling of being part of America and your community. Voting is one of the few times when all Americans are equal.

New found nature in Newfoundland

COMMON GROUND

AMY WHORF MCGUIGGAN

Every year, sometime in late summer, my friend Ellen and I squeeze in a short road trip. Where we go depends on a few things, first and foremost that it be somewhat off the beaten path although these days, what with all sorts of ecotourism and "extreme" tours, there seem to be fewer and fewer roads less traveled. Still, we try to go where too many others are not going. Where other travelers look for weather, food, accommodations and shopping adventures to define their vacation experience, we look for local history, music, beer and wildlife, not necessarily in that order. Which isn't to say that we haven't been known, on occasion, to bask hedonistically in the sun or collect our fair share of kitschy souvenirs (mine, this trip, was a stuffed puffin in a can).

This year's adventure took us to Newfoundland, a place locals refer to as the "rock," a place of pristine, brooding wilderness whose mention, more often than not, elicits a perplexed look from people who ask, "But is there anything there?" Indeed there is.

If readers will indulge me, I'm venturing far afield this month to write about Newfoundland not only because I saw so much new nature, but because I was reminded, though somewhat far from Hingham, that we really are connected, ecologically, to everything. It all is one, and that oneness, that interdependence, makes one feel at home in the great big world. The humpbacks and minke whales we saw are the same magnificent creatures who roam our own plankton-rich, offshore feeding ground, the Stellwagon Bank. The frigid Labrador Current that oxygenates the waters off Newfoundland also nourishes our Gulf of Maine.

There were other reminders, too, that we are all links in a long chain of life. The intrepid Pilgrims stopped off in Renews, Newfoundland before resuming the journey that ultimately brought them to Plymouth. Guglielmo Marconi changed the way people communicated with his transatlantic wireless transmissions, first from the desolate, windswept Cape Spear in Newfoundland in 1901 and soon there after from a lonely, windswept scarp at Wellfleet on Cape Cod. When I heard folks in Newfoundland referring to the island's treacherous coastal waters as the "Graveyard of the Atlantic," I was reminded that, during the era of sail, the same notorious moniker was given to our Cape Cod shoals. And from Newfoundland waters, fishermen were harvesting the snow crabs that would, the next day, arrive on dinner tables in Boston restaurants.

Still — and here is the whole point, I think, of travelling — there were many new things to see — puffins, capelin and bakeapples, to name just three — and new opportunities to throw open the field guides and experience another small, unique miracle in the circle of life.

Earning distinction as Newfoundland's official bird, the Atlantic puffin — every visitor's favorite bird — is a short, stocky, black and white bird with a prominent (during breeding season) red and yellow triangular beak. Comical, even gaudy, in appearance the "sea parrot," formerly known as the common puffin, is a member of the Alcidae family which includes murres, razorbills and auks.

More than 340 bird species call Newfoundland home and during the summer more than 35 million seabirds gather in 20 major colonies. Scientists continue to study seabird coloniality and surmise that birds find not only safety in numbers (as fish do in schools) but also opportunity for social interaction and stimulation. Seabird behavior, it seems, begets behavior. Eggs are laid and hatched in synchrony and hatchlings learn and fledge together.

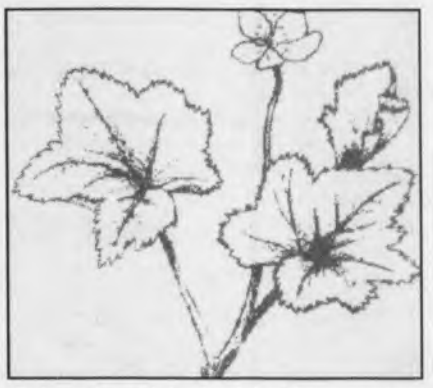
The largest concentration of breeding puffins in North America is found on the three islands of the Witless Bay Ecological Reserve just south of St. John's. The puffin, like many seabird species, is oceanic — or pelagic — and comes to land only to nest. Penguin-like, puffins court on the water, their brilliant beak the focal point of amorous displays (they've been called the love birds of the sea), and then dig a burrow (also with their beak) several feet into crevices where the pair, who mate for life, build a nest lined with grasses. One white egg, sometimes with ghostly brownish or lavender markings, is laid in mid-May in the dark recesses of the burrow and incubated, by both the male and female, for about 40 days. Once hatched, the puffling is brooded — or protected — for about a week after which it remains alone in the burrow, day and night, while its parents hunt for food offshore, returning to the burrow two to six times a day with beakfuls of fish.

The Atlantic puffin, also called a sea parrot because of its prominent and colorful beak, is the official bird of Newfoundland.

When ready to fledge, the puffling emerges from the burrow at night, to avoid predators, and takes to the wing. If the young can survive their first year they, like many seabirds, can live for more than 20 years. With their stubby wings puffins, like their fellow alcids, find flight a bit tedious, "running" across the water to become airborne. They are, however, agile swimmers and divers, using their wings to "fly" underwater and their feet to control direction. For three to five years the young puffin remains at sea, returning to land only when mature and ready to breed. Thick waterproof feathers protect the bird against the extremes of a North Atlantic winter and a special gland, common to all seabirds, enables puffins to excrete salt from the water and satisfy their need for fresh water.

Puffin populations, like the populations of many seabirds and migratory birds, suffered serious declines during the 19th and early 20th centuries due to commercial hunting (for feathers and food) and egging (for specimens). Today's threats come from burgeoning gull populations — a large Black-backed gull can swallow a young puffin whole — and from humans in the form of habitat disturbances and fishing practices that reduce the availability of the puffin's favorite food, the capelin.

A slender, smelt-like pelagic fish, capelin are the most important food species in the North Atlantic and are fed on in a frenzy during their June spawn by whales, seals, seabirds and predaceous fish including cod, squid and halibut. Like our local food species, the sand lance, capelin feed on planktonic crustaceans. Vast schools swarm inshore to spawn — each female is accompanied by two males — and the sticky eggs are laid on the substrate. Easy to catch during the spawning period, capelin were a traditional fertilizer for Newfoundland gardens and were snacked on after being roasted. These days, the commercial fishing of capelin provides the Japanese market with roe-bearing females. However, tens of thousands of tons of small females and males are discarded from the catch, raising concerns by many Newfoundlanders that capelin stocks and the many species that depend on capelin may be threatened.



Bakeapple, with its five-lobed leaves and solitary five-petalled flower, grows in boggy areas.

Popular on the Newfoundlander's family table is a quirky little berry known as a bakeapple, no relation at all to apples but, rather, a low-growing, amber-colored cousin of the raspberry. Known in Scandinavia as a cloudberry, the name bakeapple is thought to be an anglicized version of the French, "Baie qu'appelle," meaning "what do you call this berry."

Berries have, traditionally, been an important part of the Newfoundlanders' diet and berry-picking is a sacred seasonal, multigenerational pastime in Newfoundland, much as it was here a generation or two ago when berry thickets skirted roadsides, dune edges and backyards. Unfortunately, development here has made it harder and harder for us to find the sweet jewels of nature, and though Newfoundland's pristine wildernesses can still offer a bounty of strawberries, partridgeberries, raspberries, squashberries, blueberries and bakeapples, they too are feeling the pressures of an encroaching modern society.

A delicacy in Newfoundland and Labrador where it is used in jams, crumble and tarts, or just sprinkled over ice cream, the native bakeapple, sometimes called a bog apple, grows in the moist, acidic soil of northern peat bogs, reaching a height of no more than 10 inches. By late July, a solitary, five-petalled white flower yields the sweet and juicy berry, rich in vitamin C.

I can vouch for its succulence and unique taste, having savored it in butter tarts and as a jam (as I did partridgeberries). Indeed, it was one of the souvenirs I carried home along with a six pack of St. John's brew and a slew of CDs by traditional Newfoundland bands with roots deep in the Celtic tradition. As for sampling the seal flipper pie, the squid burgers and the fried bologna, they'll have to wait until next time.

Acronyms take over

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I was reading the other day about how something called MCAS was discriminating against minorities, the poor and doctor wannabes who might find a cure for cancer if we got off their backs, when I was hit by a sudden thought.

I didn't have the foggiest idea what MCAS stood for.

It only took a couple of phones calls and a half hour or more of research to determine it stood for the Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System, which is about to assess a whole generation of us as dumbkopfs.

Now I have nothing against MCAS. I can see why anyone who has ever tried to fit Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System into a one column headline would be all for it too. But we are rapidly becoming a nation of acronyms, not words.

Instead of immersing immigrants in English, maybe we should go directly from Spanish or Cambodian right to Acronym, skipping English altogether as a classical student might pass over Latin and ancient Greek as dead languages.

I don't know exactly where in history the language of Acronym originated but it's probably been there since the beginning. I can picture St. Peter, at the Last Supper, calling across the room, "Over here, J. C. There's a seat over here."

If FDR (that stands for Franklin Delano Roosevelt) didn't invent it all, he certainly gave the alphabet soup that describes our government a healthy push with his WPA, CCC and TVA.

If you were with me when ice covered most of the earth you can recall that WPA stood for Works Progress Administration, CCC for the Civilian Conservation Corps and TVA for the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The acronyms themselves often become part of the language to the extent that we have to think a moment before we can recall the full name of the organization for which they stand.

Quick now, what does MBTA stand for. Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority, of course. But you had to think a moment, didn't you? Same with MWRA, which stands for Massachusetts Water Resources Authority.

Sports is notorious for acronyms. I thought I was familiar with all of them — RBI, ERA, QB, PGA — when they sprung a new one on me — LCS. It was a couple of years before I was comfortable with that one, which stands for League Championship Series.

Some acronyms are made up first, then words are fitted to them, sometimes awkwardly.

Remember, a few years ago a group of ladies of the evening decided to call their union COYOTE. This, they said, stood for Call Off Your Old Tired Ethics. PETA, the animals rights group, was fitted with People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals.

The current crisis in the Roman Catholic Church so far has spawned two acronyms — SNAP for Survivors Network of those Abused by Priests; and STOP for Speak Truth to Power.

And a bunch of TNTMEN recently were arrested for indecency in Canada. Their acronym stands for Totally Naked Toronto Men Enjoying Nudity. The judge threw the case out of court. The men weren't naked. They had their shoes on.

Where is our Judge Maria Lopez when Canada needs her?

HEALTH NOTES

Diet, health, and the Cohasset Public Schools

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

One of the first topics of discussion was the vending machines, their contents and how they were supplied.

On Wednesday last week, the Board of Health participated in a meeting between Mike Gill, the School Health Coordinator, and Jane Lanzilotti, a registered dietician and nutritionist for the Tufts School of Medicine, and Bob Levy of Chartwell's, the school food-service provider, in the high school's new cafeteria.

The discussion centered on the rising health problem associated with too much food and improper diet of our youth. Clearly, this is a complex problem involving economics as well as exposing students to healthy as well as interesting food.

One of the first topics of discussion was the vending machines, their contents and how they were supplied. It seems that the school receives more than $40,000 a year in cash and gifts from Coca-Cola for exclusive rights to the drink vending machines in our school system. This locks the school system into an eight-year contract. While some of the products in the machines such as Dasani water, are benign or beneficial, other products like Fruitopia are little more than water and sugar.

The machines carrying snack items are controlled by Chartwell and the food distributor which they use. We would like to see nothing but healthy snacks in these machines in lieu of potato chips, and the like.

We were also dismayed to learn that the ice cream novelty vending machine will soon be returning. Fat and carbohydrate loaded desserts are not exactly what the doctor ordered. By offering those not-so-healthy items, the school appears to be sending a mixed message: the health curriculum encourages a healthy diet and yet the vast majority of food snacks and desserts sold from vending machines fly in the face of the items offered for sale.

Mike Gill is in a constant battle to reduce the fraction of empty calories purveyed in these machines with those in the school staff, who need the money to support beneficial programs. Carbonated sodas have been removed from the machines and our observation of students during a break was that the machines are less used than the new attractively designed cafeteria lines where one could get a healthy snack as well as a great variety of healthy foods.

At lunch the made-to-order sandwich line is especially popular. Still the battle goes on between balancing proper nutrition with the economic operation of our food services. In summary, anyone would be delighted with the quality and variety of food service provided at our high school cafeteria, even though there is a preponderance of high fat food. There are some problems with the system, but those responsible for feeding our children are highly motivated and intelligent. The Board of Health Hopes to help by assisting in menu planning for a week in which nothing but "so-called" healthy foods will be served. We are hoping this will occur the week of Oct. 7.

Cohasset Center for Student Coastal Studies

For five years now, the building on the now Town owned former Hagerty property has been the center of a controversy. It's no secret that the Board of Health has wanted it to be used as a center for student education and environmental monitoring to fulfill the Town's needs to assess the condition of our natural resources. Finally, the Town has agreed to lease the Hagerty building to the new organization under Jack Buckley and those science teachers who will be mentoring the kids doing volunteer monitoring as a part of their student activities.

You'll get a chance to learn something about the goals and functions of the new organization by attending a family day at Mariner's Park next Saturday (at the end of Parker Avenue 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.) where the New England Aquarium will have experts and marine life tanks and exhibits for questioning, viewing and touching.

Several of the teachers who have been contributing their time to the project will be available to explain the types of environmental monitoring and assessment the Town asks the students to accomplish.

In addition, you can learn something about lobstering, our largest local maritime industry. One of our local lobstermen will have his boat at the Mariner's Park dock, where you can go aboard, and see how a lobsterman hauls, baits and empties the lobster pots used in the fishery.

Several of the town's elders, familiar with the town will be available to answer questions about its history.

I understand there will be free hamburgers, and other refreshments.

School business manager is also a computer geek

Sets up user-friendly system for principals

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

At the completion of the school construction project, administrators will able to complete requisitions and purchase orders directly from their offices.

When School Business Manager Ivan Klimko arrived in Cohasset prior to the last school year, he had one goal in mind – streamlining the district's financial system.

Klimko arrived a month early to design a 21-digit accounting system that would make it easier for faculty members and auditors to understand the school's budget.

But along with standardizing various aspects of the accounting process, Klimko has also greatly increased the technological capacity of the accounting system. What was once stored on a single computer in the Business Office at the middle-senior high school, is now a secure network that can be accessed at 14 workstations in schools around town. The network allows the principals of each school to check real time balances and monitor budgets from their desks.

At the completion of the school construction project, the system will go online even further, with administrators able to complete requisitions and purchase orders directly from their offices as well (with all the construction, the current connections aren't reliable enough to make the full transition).

"I'm thrilled that we have it," said Supt. Edward Malvey. "It's taken some time to build up our computer capacity here in Cohasset, but the town has been very supportive over the years. With Ivan's expertise coming into the district as a business manager, there has been real value, not only on the financial end, but on the technology end as well."

Klimko is also excited by the new system. He seems to love punching keys as much as crunching numbers, but he still believes in having back-up. No less than once a week, Klimko backs up the school's files onto zip disks and takes them home for safekeeping in case anything were to happen to the school building. When the requisitions and purchase orders are done online, he will insist that there be paper back-ups as well.

"I love the machines, I truly do, I think we all do these days," said Klimko. "But there should really always be matching paper back-up in case anything ever happened to the system,"

Another feature of the system is its compatibility with everyday applications.

"Suppose I just want to work with the general ledger accounts," said Klimko, after he has downloaded the entire Fiscal Year '02 budget to Microsoft Excel in less than 60 seconds. "I just get rid of the stuff I don't want and I total it and I have my total legal budget for the fiscal year."

Tasks that used to take 3-4 hours, such as reconciling the school activities account (another budget that has received a separate upgrade), now take less than 10 minutes.

It is almost as easy to fix as to operate, since the system, designed by Lawrence Braverman Associates of New Jersey, can also be worked on remotely by the company.

"I just sit here at my desk, on the phone, while they work on my computer," said Klimko. "It's amazing."

The system, when fully integrated, will also cut back on user errors.

"The point-and-click function of the program is wonderful," said Klimko motioning to a three-ring binder that is currently used as a reference point for interpreting the accounting system. "Not only for the reduction of errors and the amount of time spent, but for seeing your account, with all sorts of drop down-menus and titles right next to them. You just go right down to what you want to do and you just click."

Town still plugged in to burying utility wires

Selectmen are still mulling over whether to bury the electrical wires underground in the Village as part of the Downtown Revitalization Project.

Town Manager Mark Haddad ran numbers on what the cost would be to taxpayers depending on the scope of the project. The other portions of the project, the downtown streetscape, James Brook culvert, St. Stephen sidewalk, and new water main for South Main Street have been funded through grants and other sources, such as the MBTA mitigation agreement.

"Well have something on for the selectmen next Tuesday," said Haddad.

The board is looking at the possibility of a debt exclusion to Proposition 2-1/2 which would allow the town five years to pay back the money, or a one-time capital exclusion that would pay for the project in one year.

The price of the project ranges form $400,000 to $800,000. The board has all but excluded the biggest option, which would cost $1.6 million. A capital exclusion would cost the average home $280.15 this year for an $800,000 project while a $400,000 project would cost the average home $140.07.

"It's going to be a debate until the vote is taken," said Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan. "It's a tough thing, because we are in a tough economy, but yet at the same time, the train is coming, we've got to do the James Brook restoration, so it is all coming together."

The project received a bit of a blow when Craig Miller of the Waterfield Design Group, which is overseeing the project was informed that the only acceptable alternative to burying the wires would be to use standard wooden telephone poles, instead of fancy concrete ones.

"The right thing to do seems to be to bury the wires," said Sullivan. "But then you think fiscally, do you want to add more taxes to the taxpayer? Then again, are you going to regret the fact that you didn't do it if you decide not to do it. So, it's a real Catch 22."

Right-of-way gets a trim

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

No, construction on the Greenbush Line hasn't begun, although some may think so if they've seen the giant weed-whacker in action.

Starting yesterday (Sept. 25) in Hingham and Oct. 1 in Cohasset, preliminary brush cutting is being conducted along the right-of-[redacted]y by a machine [redacted] is a backhoe with [redacted]shredder on it that swings from side to side.

According to community liaison Tom Carroll, who is with Cashman-Balfour Beatty – the company that will construct the train line — brush is being trimmed back a maximum of 10 feet along both sides of the center of the track, with the exception of wetlands.

"This cutting is being performed to make the right-of-way accessible to surveyors and light equipment," Carroll said. The brush along the rail bed that is very close to houses is being trimmed back by hand, he said.

Wetland areas are being marked off with tape, so when the brush-cutter reaches a wetland area, it will exit the right-of-way and then is put on a trailer and moved to the next part of the rail bed.

"This cutting is being performed to make the right-of-way accessible to surveyors and light equipment."
— Tom Carroll, train community liaison

"Surveyors are in front of the machine marking out wetlands," Carroll said, noting earlier surveys are not being relied upon to delineate wetlands.

Brush cutting is being conducted from 7:30 a.m.-3:30 p.m., Monday-Friday.

"It's a very quiet machine," Carroll said.

Flyers printed on green paper were mailed to direct abutters alerting them of the brush cutting.

Video contest

Congratulations to Sam Kusek, Michael Martone, and Adam Chang for participating in the South Shore Video Contest. They submitted two videos entitled, "The Tales of Poe" and "The Journey West". They competed with other students ages 13-15 from many communities on the South Shore and communities as far away as Sharon and Martha's Vineyard. They were presented an Oscar for the "Best Outtakes" at the recent Oscar Awards night at the Duxbury Free Library.

Sam has participated in the Video contest for the last three years, Michael for two years, and Adam was a recent participant.

The library hopes they continue to explore the world of film making and we look forward to their next project.

Student's good writing wins recognition for art teacher

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Like any good writer, Whitney Jaffe is quick to deflect praise away from her writing skills and towards her subject matter.

But unlike most good writers, Whitney is only nine-years-old. Her essay on her art teacher, Besty Ogden, who teaches at the Osgood School, has been named one of 20 finalists nationwide in the Barbie Arts Teacher of the Year Search. The contest asks students to write an essay of 250 words or less nominating the teacher "whose talent and creativity have a lasting impact on children." The essay garnered the school a $5,000 grant through the National Arts Education Initiative, which is a program of the Entertainment Industry Foundation. That foundation is a 60-year-old philanthropic collaborative of Hollywood types currently headed by 007 himself, Pierce Brosnan.

"I couldn't have written such a great essay if she wasn't such a great teacher," said Whitney as she presented the award to her teacher in front of the entire Osgood School, representatives from the EIF (Brosnan was not there), and a gaggle of reporters.

Writing comes naturally to Whitney, says her parents, which makes sense since both of her parental units are journalists.

Her father, Charles A. Jaffe is a financial columnist for the Boston Globe, and her mother, Susan Jaffe, is a former contributing editor for Nation's Business, which was a publication of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

"They certainly aren't afraid of it," said Chuck Jaffe of his two daughters and writing (Whitney's older sister Thomson also entered the contest). "They like expressing themselves and they understand the editing process better than most kids their age, because they know that that's what we do."

But Mom and Dad stayed out of the writing process.

"The essay is Whitney's personality and she wrote this herself," said Susan Jaffe. "We sort of said, 'Here's the spell-check button, and you might want to put a period there,' but it is really Whitney's essay."

The essay highlights the 14-year career of Ogden, who teaches art through the medium of life, incorporating current events and curriculum into her art classes. She greets her students every morning with a "Hello Artists!" and encourages civic responsibility through a series of community based art projects.

But true to form, Ogden passed on a lot of the praise.

"It takes more than just one person to be a good teacher, whether it's in the arts or music or a classroom teacher," said Ogden. "Just working together to teach the kids and to give them as much as we can and to relate things to their lives as well as outside of school."

The EIF and Barbie also introduced "Art Teacher Barbie," a doll which came in two styles, one a brunette and one a blonde.

"Its exciting to see an Art Teacher Barbie," said Ogden. "I thought it was going to look like the winner, but I knew that it wouldn't have gray hair. It's a wonderful recognition of art educators around the country."

And, at least from observing those around Ogden for her big day, it was a wonderful recognition of art educators around the country.

Art teacher Betsy Ogden gives her student Whitney Jaffe a hug, as she comes to the podium to accept her Barbie Arts Teacher Award during a special ceremony last week at the Osgood School.

"Whitney was bouncing, as you might have seen and is really truly excited for Betsy Ogden," said Susan Jaffe. "She's said, "I know I'm not supposed to, but I hope she wins the whole thing, because Mrs. Ogden is so, so neat!' Betsy does such wonderful things with the kids , she's just very giving."

Ogden credits her students for possessing the same giving quality.

"I wouldn't be up here if it wasn't for all the art students that I've had," said Ogden. "They're great artists, they're very enthusiastic, and I've learned as much from them as they have from me."

Dana Sterling of the EIF is on a nation-wide tour, delivering the awards to the various finalists, a trip which she has enjoyed.

"It's so rewarding to come out," said Sterling, who usually operates out of Los Angeles. "Seeing the 3,000 essays on paper and then actually being there, seeing the principals, the teachers who win and the students who wrote the essays is great."

Osgood School Principal Janet Sheehan was very proud and noted how the award was a testament to not only Ogden, but to the whole Osgood community.

"That is why I tried to have the theme of partnership, because it is a partnership that has actually extended beyond the community to this foundation that is now supporting education," said Sheehan. "This is really a committed staff, they are all really wonderful."

School department says Kaplan will be missed

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Judging by the accolades heaped upon departing Director of Student Services Steven Kaplan at last week's School Committee meeting, his presence in the district will be sorely missed.

Supt. Edward Malvey had informed the board at a previous meeting that Kaplan had notified him verbally that he intended to resign, but had not yet submitted an official notice.

"Steve has been a tremendous asset to the Cohasset Public Schools," said Malvey. "He's knowledgeable, he's a gentleman, he's loyal."

Kaplan will take a position in the Lincoln-Hanscom school district, which is closer to his home.

"I'll miss the outstanding people that I worked with — the administration, the School Committee — they've all been extremely supportive," said Kaplan, who attended the meeting to present results of the Special Education Audit.

According to Kaplan — who's been with Cohasset schools for two years and was paid nearly $75,000 last year, according to the 2001Town Report — it was not his intention to leave the district.

"It was the last thing on my mind(to leave Cohasset)," said Kaplan. "It really was something that happened because I happened to run into somebody by chance."

He said by far the biggest factor in the decision was the reduction in driving time.

"It will reduce my daily commute by almost an hour each way," Kaplan said. "It is a way of making my life at my age more livable, but I am going to miss Cohasset."

The School Committee, "with regret" and a wish of "good luck," accepted Kaplan's resignation.

"I think that he organized the (special education) department and got the budget under control," said Vice Chairman Chartis Tebbetts, citing two of Kaplan's major accomplishments during his term in Cohasset.

Malvey echoed Tebbetts' sentiments.

"He did a tremendous job in terms of straightening out our house fiscally," Malvey said. "I have nothing but the best to wish him as he moves on to his new school district."

Malvey will fill the position on an interim basis for this year.

"I m going to be looking for an Acting Director of Student Services for the year," said Malvey. "It's tough to do a search at this time with school up and running. We'll locate an Acting Director on a full-time basis, and evaluate from there to see whether that person would work out, or if we need to do a search at that time."

Skippers go to 2-0 on strength of line play, ground game

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

For the second week in a row, the Cohasset football team escaped a non-league match-up with a narrow win, beating Arlington Catholic, 14-6. Although the team has not played the dominating brand of football displayed by last year's co-league champions, they are 2-0 heading into the third week of the season.

"This is the best Arlington Catholic team we've seen," noted fifth year coach Tony Rolfe, who has played Catholic the last three years. "They think they are pretty good, and I agree."

After also playing (Rolfe said) "the strongest Nantucket team we have seen" last week, the coach affirmed that this seems to be an "up" year for many teams. South Shore League teams have played a total of 12 games, and the SSL team has lost only twice. Carver lost to Plymouth North and Norwell lost to Hopkinton, and both those winning teams could very well end up in the Super Bowl of their divisions.

At Arlington Catholic, the Skippers took on a very standard approach with their new power runner, Braun Goodson. They ran between the tackles all day as the senior tailback piled up 176 yards on 29 carries behind a solid and improving offensive line.

Goodson picked up positive yards on nearly every carry, leading to some extended drives that let the defense rest on the hot day and an advantage in the field position battle. In the second quarter, Goodson broke through the Catholic secondary for a 12-yard touchdown to give the Skippers a 6-0 halftime advantage. The extra point attempt was blocked.

Because it was such a hot day, Rolfe rotated in more second string players than usual to keep his starters rested. Sophomore fullback Ted Straughn spent most of the game on the bench because of the heat, and the offensive line was constantly being shifted around. Nevertheless, for the second week in a row, Cohasset clearly had the advantage on the line of scrimmage.

Even on defense, Cohasset managed to contain Catholic's third year starting tailback, Ernie Adolino, a talented and quick runner. Senior Cosimo Cambi, playing both ways on the defensive and offensive lines, combined with Ben Lynner, back from an injury, for

Boys remain unbeaten

A pair of late goals keep soccer team out of loss column

One thing Dave Nigro will not question his team on is hustle.

The Cohasset High boys soccer coach, who last week lambasted his players for their decision-making following a 3-3 tie to Mashpee both in person and in this space, made it clear after a 1-0-2 run over the past week that he continues to be thrilled with the physical effort his troops are putting forth.

"We're a thin team in terms of depth, but the kids just keep plugging, I'll give them that," said the third year Cohasset head coach, whose team remains unbeaten at 3-0-3, on Tuesday night. "I'm happy with the way they've played over the last few games, including tonight.

"We kept just missing on scoring chances, but the kids didn't hang their heads. They kept coming, and eventually they scored right in the nick of time."

Indeed, after Jesse Brewer headed in a shot past Carver's keeper in the 79th minute, the ball was just off the foot of the Carver center on the ensuing kickoff when the final whistle sounded.

After a scoreless first half that was marked by Cohasset's territorial domination and several missed scoring opportunities , Carver struck on a quick counterattack 14 minutes in to the second half when a long clear was taken near midfield by a Carver middie Rich Gurney and slipped by the covering Cohasset sweeper to attacker Chris Spicer, who had gained a step on the fullback, to walk in one-on-one with Cohasset keeper Curt Kahn. Spicer slid the ball past Kahn to make it 1-0.

Robert Hickey and Dave Santiago both had headers sail over the next in the latter stages of the second half, as Cohasset redoubled its efforts on the attack. Brewer's header from six yards out came off of a desperation all-hands-on-deck attack with just two seconds showing on the timekeeper's clock.

"It was just a weird game," noted Nigro. "We expended a lot of energy on Saturday, and the kids just seemed to be in a little bit of a fog. They kept trying to fight through it, though, and we should probably feel pretty good that we managed to pull out a tie."

Nigro and the Skippers probably felt this way on Saturday as well after shocking a strong Div. 2 Newton South team with a 2-2 tie.

Late game heroics again kept Cohasset out of the loss column through six games. This time it was junior Chris Clark pulling the Skippers collective fat out of the fire with five minutes remaining on the game clock. After taking a nifty pass out of the left corner from freshman Matt O'Connell, Clark made a quick cross over move to free his right foot up and drilled a beautiful hooking shot from the right over the leaping Newton South keeper and just under the cross bar.

"I think Newton might have

Major changes on tap for Pilgrim Conference?

10 schools geared to break away after 2003-'04 season

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

All seven schools of the Atlantic Coast League and three from the Old Colony League have informed the MIAA of their intent to break away from the Pilgrim Conference after the 2003-'04 school year.

Pilgrim Conference officials claim they are trying to reach a compromise that will keep these schools in the fold, which currently consists of 32 teams in five separate leagues, but a spokesperson for the 10-school faction says he's seen little movement on that front since the announcement to disband was made in early July.

"We heard there were going to be more discussions, but we've been hearing that for months," said Al Sullivan, athletic director at Nauset High Regional High School in Eastham, one of the seven Atlantic Coast League schools involved in the secession. "It makes you wonder how much of a priority it really is with this group."

The secession card was played by Atlantic Coast League school principals, according to Sullivan, a few weeks after Pilgrim Conference officials did not respond favorably to proposals made by these schools at a realignment meeting in mid-

Lady Skippers swamp Sailors

The local field hockey rivalry of Cohasset and Scituate has produced some very tight and competitive games over the past few years. Even though there was much anticipation in Scituate for this match-up last Tuesday, the visitors were clearly the superior team, rolling to a 5-2 victory.

"These two towns are always competitive," said Scituate head coach Marcia McKeever. "Normally, it's a little closer."

Scituate actually began the scoring, taking a 1-0 lead just two minutes into the game. Off a beautiful cross from senior wing Kathryn Noonan, senior Christine Stark hit the back of the net as Noonan was credited with her fifth assist in five games.

However, Cohasset dominated the rest of the first half, building up a 3-1 lead at the halfway point. Junior Jessie Guild scored the tying goal at the 17 minute mark off a pass from senior Deanna Brown.

Senior Heather Peraino gave the visitors their first lead of the game when she netted a corner play off junior Courtney Caron's assist. The front line of Brown, Guild and Caron has been very successful this year, with Peraino moving from center forward to center midfield to help set up the plays.

Brown added Cohasset's third goal of the half unassisted, breaking through the Scituate defense and beating Scituate sophomore goalie Sarah Meyrick to the weak side corner.

"This was a very important game for us," noted veteran Skipper coach Deb Bostwick. "They were very disciplined out there today."

In her first season on the varsity squad, Meyrick has performed well, recording 15 saves and some nice plays to break up

Key stretch

Girls soccer team eyes win streak

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

A one goal win to improve to 2-4 might not sound like a big deal, but Cohasset girls soccer coach Deb Beal feels it could be a big step in the quest to get the Lady Skippers into the state tourney for the first time in her 5-year tenure.

Coming off an "uplifting" 2-0 loss to perennial South Shore League power Abington last Friday, the Lady Skippers had what Beal considered "a very good practice" on Monday, and took that in to Tuesday's home showdown with Carver

"We played a good game with Abington," said Beal. "I didn't know what to make of them with all of the players they lost to graduation, but they're still a good team. But our girls played hard and they played well. We just couldn't score.

"We were outscored, but we weren't outplayed, and I think that meant a lot to the confidence of the girls. They weren't happy with the loss, but they were happy with their performance."

The host Skippers carried play in the first half, doing everything the coach was hoping they'd do…other than score — an all too familiar theme.

"We're not going to be a high scoring team, but we can score if we're playing to our strengths," continued Beal. "We've been working a lot on overlapping and dumping the ball into the corners, and just becoming more opportunistic, and I think that might be starting to take root.

"We've got so much speed up front and forwards who really hustle. We have to take advantage of that."

After a halftime refresher on these messages, leading scorer Jen Buckley got free on a quick attack and finished for her fourth goal of the season, half of the Lady Skippers offensive output on the season.

"Jen has just beert unbelievable," lauded the coach. "She's a horse. She can run all day, and she has a great sense of when to change pace and accelerate, and she does it so quickly."

The Skippers continued to carry the bulk of the play, but could not push another one past the Carver keeper.

"We weren't communicating well at times (Tuesday), which kind of concerned me," said Beal. "That's something else we're going to have to work on in practice, because we've got some games coming up where I think we could really start piling up a few wins."

The Cohasset girls travel to Harwich to take on a reportedly weak Rough Ryders squad today (4 p.m.), and then to Hull to take on another struggling team, on Monday.

Beal's main concerns about those games seemed to be the periphery intangibles.

"You never know what's going to happen on Hull's windy little field, and you never know how your players are going to react to a 90-minute bus ride (to Harwich)," offered Beal. "But those are things we have to deal with if we want to be a tourney team."

The Lady Skippers close out next week at home with Norwell (who squeaked by Cohasset, 1-0, back on Sept. 10) coming in on Wednesday and Mashpee (who Cohasset topped 4-0 on Sept. 12 after a long bus ride) makingthe long trek north on Friday to play under the lights at Alumni Field (7 p.m. start).

"We've got winnable games coming up," Beal concluded. "If we're serious abut making the tourney, this is the time to get serious."

The coach also lauded the recent work of Gillian Weber, who has been shuffled back between midfield and forward, and goalkeepers Kelly Holway and Brittany Novak, who have been splitting halves between the pipes. Novak has also been providing some needed depth in the midfield rotation.

a very effective pass rush.

"With Cosimo, we almost take him for granted now — that's how good he is," lauded Rolfe. "And having Ben back really helped."

Cohasset scored its second touchdown in the third quarter on a 27-yard Mike Snowdale pass to wideout John Durkin. The tandem hit the end zone again on the two point conversion to give the Skippers a 14-0 advantage. With Cohasset focusing on pounding the ball on the ground, Snowdale only threw 10 passes, but completed eight of them for 99 yards, with one touchdown and one interception.

Catholic did come back with Adolino scoring on a 42-yard screen pass on the first offensive play of the fourth quarter. Adolino looked like he would be caught for a short gain, but somehow managed to escape a gang of Skipper tacklers for the score that made it 14-6. The senior finished the game with 113 yards on 19 carries for the Cougars.

Cohasset put all thoughts of a comeback to rest by effectively running down the clock behind Goodson.

"They spent a lot of time trying to cut down our pass," observed Rolfe, who also mentioned that Catholic's defense was strikingly similar to that of Nantucket. "That's probably why Braun was able to rush for so many yards."

Cohasset plays North Quincy this Friday night, its first home game of the year.

MaxLax off to great start

SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

This past weekend, over 175 youth lacrosse players suited up to play as part of the new indoor lacrosse program being hosted at the South Shore Sports Center in Hingham. Players from each age group (grades 3 – 8) had a great time shaking off the cobwebs as it didn't take long to get back into the swing of things as the games were well matched and produced many exciting moments for the players and their fans.

Game of the Week: U14 Cohasset v Scituate

In an early season preview of what could be two of the U14 league finalists, Cohasset and Scituate showed why this match-up has turned into a classic area rivalry. Both teams came out strong by trading goals for the first four tally's of the game with Peter Oswald getting two for Cohasset and Alex Cuomo and Jack Dings getting the marks for Scituate. Cohasset then opened up a 5 – 2 lead on scores by Mark Flibotte, Mike Grimm, and Jake Cuneo who scored on a great rush from his defensive position. Scituate's Austin Winters kept the score within reach with a sleek quick stick, but scores from Charlie Czerkawski, Matt Burgess, and another from Grimm on a no-look pass from Chris Mills closed out the first half with Cohasset leading 7 - 3.

With Cohasset sitting on a 4 point advantage, Scituate came out strong and caught their opponent off guard with quick stingers by Dings and Cuomo that launched a 5 – 0 run and secured a 8 – 8 tie with less than five minutes to play. With time running down, Scituate's Ben Wicks seized the moment and put Scituate ahead 9 – 8 in what looked like the game winner. But with less than a minute on the clock, Czerkawski notched his 2nd of the day on a multi-dodge piece of art that brought cheers from both sides while sending the game into OT. In a fitting end to a great contest, Cohasset managed to fend off a strong first rush when Scituate won the ensuing face-off. A crunching defensive stand resulted in a fast break for Cohasset where Czerkawski found Oswald streaking down the side and the game ended when he found the upper right corner of the goal (for his hat trick) and the 10 – 9 win in OT.

Wes Ulmer was also masterful in the goal for Cohasset with 11 saves two coming in the opening moments of the overtime period.

been coming in here taking us a little lightly," noted Nigro. "They were probably a more talented team, but our guys just outworked them, I think. It was a satisfying tie."

Dave Santiago scored the other Skippers goal to counter a Newton South first half tally.

Santiago also scored the lone goal of the game in the Skippers 1-0 win over Abington on Friday, the third goal of the season for the junior attacker.

This was a game similar to the Carver game in that the Skippers created the bulk of the opportunities and controlled the ball in their offensive end for much of the game, but simply could not break through.

"We're creating opportunities, which I obviously like, but we're just not finishing," said Nigro. "Hopefully, we can start finishing a few more of those chances, but I know we're not an explosive offensive team. When the good chances are there, you hope we finish. The key for us is playing good, sound soccer."

Major changes on tap for Pilgrim Conference?

June.

At the June meeting, Atlantic Coast League school principals and athletic directors were looking to head off the Pilgrim Conference realignment in 2005 that would go strictly by student enrollment numbers. Specifically, they were concerned Dennis-Yarmouth and Sandwich could be moving "up" to the Old Colony League and Nauset "down" to the Patriot League, moves that would break up some natural rivalries as well as necessitate an increase in travel costs to already strapped athletic budgets.

"It just didn't seem like the (other Pilgrim Conference officials) were sympathetic to our situation," reported Sullivan. "We felt we had to take action now, while we still had some control. If we'd waited to the beginning of school to inform the MIAA, that would have cost us another year, because the (bylaw) says you've got to give two full years notice."

Sullivan felt it made more sense to secede from the Conference a year prior to scheduled realignment, explaining that trying to do both in the same year would cause "mass confusion" and "possible further fragmenting."

Subsequently, the principals of the seven ACL schools — Nauset, Sandwich, Dennis-Yarmouth, Plymouth North, Whitman-Hanson, Randolph and Quincy — voted to form their own independent athletic league, and principals from three schools currently aligned with the Old Colony League — Plymouth South, Falmouth and North Quincy — voted to join them. These 10 schools then formally notified the MIAA of their intent to split with the Pilgrim Conference after the 2003-'04 school year in order to form this new independent league.

The tentative plan at this time is to form two divisions of the Atlantic Coast League, with Nauset, Dennis-Yarmouth, Sandwich, Plymouth South and Falmouth in the South Division and Plymouth North, Whitman-Hanson, Randolph and the two Quincy teams in the North Division.

In sports such as soccer, field hockey, basketball, hockey, baseball and softball, divisional rivals would meet twice during the season, while South and North teams would meet only once. This would mean only two or three long trips south or north a year, and more "free dates" to arrange non-league games against schools from neighboring towns – all of which could account for considerable savings in the travel budgets.

"There is pressure from school committees to cut budgets and principals can go back and show them this," said Sullivan. "We're cutting the budget without completely disrupting athletic issues here."

"We wanted to control our own destiny to a certain extent. The schools in the ACL right now are great partners in sports. We all work well together. If there's a problem, we can call one another and work things out. We don't have people who hide in bunkers and avoid the situations. We have a good situation right now. Why wouldn't we want to keep it?"

One of the specific frustrations expressed by Sullivan and his ACL counterparts was the decision by representatives from the Patriot and South Shore Leagues, the two "small school" Pilgrim Conference leagues, to delay action on their proposals. He even charged that representatives from several of these smaller schools were never even informed of the realignment issues raised at the mid-June meeting.

However, Norwell High Athletic Director Jim Sullivan (no relation to Al) countered that he and his small school partners saw no reason to rush a decision on the proposals offered by the ACL schools, noting that the scheduled realignment was still three years away.

"I think we understand what the problems are for the members of Atlantic Coast League," said the Norwell AD.

"I think we understand what the problems are for the members of Atlantic Coast League. A lot of our schools have the same kinds of problems. I think that what we were trying to do in putting off the vote was give people a chance to cool down and just talk, away from all the saber-rattling and confrontations."

Norwell High Athletic Director Jim Sullivan

"A lot of our schools have the same kind of problems. I think that what we were trying to do in putting off the vote was give people a chance to cool down and just talk, away from all the saber-rattling and confrontations."

Norwell High has been entrenched in the smallest of the Pilgrim Conference's Leagues for years, the South Shore, but Jim Sullivan pointed to several other schools that have been moved repeatedly as part of recent realignments, which are voted on every four years, including his own home town school, Scituate High.

"These ACL schools voted Scituate back and forth all those times between leagues," continued the Norwell AD. "No one is innocent in all of this. I think we should be looking at the best interests of the group, not individuals, and I think that's what the South Shore League and Patriot League folks are trying to do."

Clearly, the schools that would be most greatly affected by this secession are the five remaining schools in the OCL — Barnstable, Taunton Bridgewater-Raynham, Marshfield and Silver Lake – the Pilgrim Conference's "big school" league.

In terms of student population, according to figures used for the 2001 realignment, Barnstable (1,978 students), Taunton (1,852), Silver Lake (1,765) and Bridgewater-Raynham (1,533) are the four largest schools in the current OCL, followed by the three schools looking to secede (Plymouth South, North Quincy and Falmouth). Marshfield, with 1,251 students, is the smallest of the eight current Old Colony League schools.

Middleboro, with 926 students, is the largest of the 15 "smaller school" leagues, and enrollment figures drop precipitously from there: Duxbury- 891, Hingham- 862, Rockland- 763.

"Marshfield has just sort of been left hanging there," noted Norwell's Jim Sullivan. "I'd say all the teams in the OCL have got to be upset. Who are they going to play? Big Three teams? That's not too likely."

The Big Three League — with New Bedford (approximately 4,500 students), Brockton (4,200) and Durfee (3,800) – is part of the Pilgrim Conference. Currently, in order to induce other Pilgrim Conference schools to schedule games against teams from these three huge schools, the MIAA allows for losses not to be counted against overall records.

Not surprisingly, officials from these five OCL schools which would remain after 2004 are among those most desperate to work a compromise with the 10 renegade schools.

"I know a lot of ideas have been thrown out there," said Silver Lake Athletic Director Bill Johnson. "I've thrown some out there, and others have too. We're having discussions among ourselves right now, and I imagine at some point pretty soon we'll get together and come up with a few solid ideas for compromising."

Of course, Johnson's school is in a rather unique position. Pembroke is in the process of splitting from the Silver Lake school district, and the fall of 2005 has been targeted for the opening of Pembroke High School (the current Silver Lake Junior High School) – corresponding with the next Pilgrim Conference realignment. It is estimated Pembroke is home to roughly half of Silver Lake's current student base of 1,765, so both Silver Lake and Pembroke may be looking to move down to the Patriot League or even South Shore League if that target date is met.

"Right now, there are a lot of different thoughts at work here, and that's part of it" conceded Johnson. "But, obviously, none of us want to see this split."

The next meeting of all Pilgrim Conference schools has been scheduled for Nov. 5.

"I'm sure there's going to be some lively discussion at that meeting," noted Jim Sullivan.

Golfers get first 'W'

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The rebuilding Cohasset High golf team got out of the loss column with an impressive showing over South Shore League rival Carver on Tuesday, topping the Crusaders, 36.5-17.5 on their home Cohasset Country Club Course.

Captain Greg O'Brien, ione of the few upperclassmen on the team, and junior Mike Hajjar each shot 39 to win their head-to-head match-ups decisively.

24 hours previous to this win, which lifted the Skippers to 1-4 on the season, the Cohasset boys traveled to the Scituate Country Club to take on six time defending SSL champ Norwell. The 40.5-13.5 loss didn't seem to come as all that much of a surprise to Cohasset golf coach Torin Sweeney.

Norwell's five scoring players – Brian Dorney (35), Brendan Boyle (38), Max Schenkein (39), Anthony Reggiannini (40) and Mike Dempsey (41) – all shot better than all but Cohasset's top player on the afternoon, sophomore Tim Pilczak, who shot a career best nine hole round of 39.

O'Brien and sophomore Colin McGruder shot 44s in the second and third spots in the Cohasset lineup, while senior Pat Reardon shot a 45 in the fourth spot.

"We've got some freshman and sophomores who have shown a lot of promise, and I'd like to start getting them an opportunity to play."

With seven matches remaining for the Skippers, including rematches with two teams that have already beaten them (Abington and Harwich) and two against league power Mashpee (who has beaten Norwell twice), Sweeney is looking to the future of his program, knowing a .500 season and the state tourney berth that goes along with it is now a long shot.

"We've got some freshman and sophomores who have shown a lot of promise, and I'd like to start getting them an opportunity to play, though we'll still try to keep the upperclassmen involved too" said the third year head coach.

corner shots on top of that.

"[Meyrick] is still learning," reported McKeever, all-in-all pleased with her rookie netminder. "Cohasset was quick with the ball and quick with their shots."

Cohasset held the position advantage for most of the game, as the Skippers' senior goalie faced 10 shots, half the total thrown on Meyrick. The Skippers even had 11 corners, three of them leading to goals, including Sarah Dennis' from Peraino, which gave her team a 4-1 advantage with 12 minutes left to play.

Scituate senior Ashley Lever brought her team to within two, notching a tally on Katy Baldwin's assist just four minutes later. But Cohasset's defense shut the home team down for the remainder of the game. Cohasset senior Rachel Smith scored her first of the season with less than a minute left, with Peraino giving the assist. Peraino, with three points in this contest, now leads the team in scoring.

Bostwick noted that the key to her team's success was consistent attacking of the free balls, and not waiting for the opposition to make the first move.

"You've got to be aggressive, you've got to want it," the coach noted, "and today, I saw girls who wanted it."

Collector's Choice at Art Center

The work of artists John Singer Sargent, Pablo Picasso, Paul Klee, Grandma Moses, Marc Chagall, Rembrandt, and August Renoir couldn't be more different. These artists, however, all share one little-known commonality. They all have had their masterpieces on display at the South Shore Art Center in its traditional Collector's Choice exhibition. The Collector's Choice exhibition affords residents of the South Shore and beyond, a unique opportunity to view, in their own regional art center, museum-quality works of art from private collections. Artwork procured thus far includes work by Andy Warhol, William Wegman, Dale Chihuly, John Constable, Marc Chagall and Salvador Dali. Collector's Choice '02 will feature recent acquisitions and focus primarily on what collectors have collected in the last ten years. The public will have only three days to view the exhibition before the work is returned to its owners and is no longer accessible to the public.

Collector's Choice is scheduled for Sept. 27-29. A gala opening reception will take place at the South Shore Art Center on Friday evening, Sept. 27, beginning at 5:30 p.m., followed by an elegant dinner at a private seaside home. The exhibition preview party will be enhanced by the opportunity to purchase collectible frames decorated by popular celebrities. Twenty personalities from the art world as well as the world of sports, politics and literature have agreed to decorate and personalize wooden frames that will be offered to the highest bidder in a silent auction. Tickets for this exhibition fundraiser are $135 ($125 for South Shore Art Center members). On Saturday, Sept. 28, the exhibition will be open to the public from 10 a.m.- 4 p.m. On Sunday, Sept. 29, the exhibition will open at 11:30 a.m. with Music Amidst the Masterpieces, an informal brunch and at 1 p.m. a concert by the Boston Chamber Music Society, Ronald Thomas, Artistic Director. Tickets are $35. Reservations for both events can be made by calling 781-383-2787.

Illustrator at Buttonwood

Harry Bliss will visit Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset on Fri. Oct. 4 from 3 –5 p.m.. Observant readers may recognize Harry Bliss as the illustrator whose work enlivens a number of magazines. He is a staff artist for the New Yorker and has had fourteen covers on the magazine since 1997.

William Steig's new book, "Which Would You Rather Be?" (Harper Collins) poses a question that is right up a kid's alley. What youngster hasn't pondered what it would be like to be a particular animal or to have a special power? The bold illustrations of Harry Bliss suit this text to a T and add immeasurably to its appeal. Bliss is also the illustrator of two other critically acclaimed books which will be available at this signing, "A Fine, Fine School", by Sharon Creech and "Countdown to Kindergarten" by Alison McGhee.

This event is part of the read Around New England Celebration. This event is free and open to the public. Please call Buttonwood at 781-383-2665 to order you signed copy if unable to attend.

Relaxed elegance in your retirement

The Cohasset Historical Society kicks off its Fall Lecture Series with Phil Smith of Phillip Hugh Smith & Associates, Interior Designers ,on Wednesday, Oct. 2 at 7:30 p.m. at the Lightkeepers' Residence.

Smith's presentation, "Cutting Back in Semi-Retirement" will offer advice on redesigning your present home or designing a new home to reflect a relaxed elegance in your new lifestyle without sacrificing your roots. The event is free and light refreshments will be served.

Parenting group meets on Oct. 17

On Thurs., Oct. 17, from 7:30-8:30 p.m., St. Stephen's Church, Highland Avenue, hosts an ongoing weekly Mindful Parenting Group; How to balance parenting, work and relationships in our hurried lives. BAYDAY is Sept. 29

South Shore ARC's Ninth Annual BAYDAY will be held Sunday, Sept. 29 from 11:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. at the 65-acre Glastonbury Abbey in Hingham. The abbey is near the intersections of Routes 3A and 228.

A $5 per-car-load admission to this family fun day includes a live broadcast by Seamus Mulligan and radio station WATD 95.9 FM, stage entertainment by Davey the Clown (unicycle, juggling and accordion music), Dumbo and Jumbo Magic Show, Royal Sorrell (mime), Rami Salami (balloon artist), a Hug-a-Bunny area, and Patricia Haley's Irish Step Dancers. A silent auction will feature goods and services donated by South Shore businesses and a food court will feature favorite children's foods.

Other children's activities include pony and pony cart rides, games, moonwalk, giant slide, pumpkin and face painting.

Proceeds from BAYDAY will be used to provide disability services to individuals and families on the South Shore. Major sponsors of BAYDAY are The Frye Agency, South Shore Savings Bank and F.X. Messina Enterprises.

South Shore ARC is a private, non-profit agency, founded in 1951 by families of individuals with developmental disabilities. South Shore ARC's main facility, located at Webb Park in North Weymouth, provides adult employment and training, day activity and senior services, PCA services and respite program. South Shore ARC's FIRST Early Intervention Program, located at the Memorial School in Weymouth, provides services to families with children from birth to age three. ARC also provides residential support services to individuals in apartments, homes and condominiums in more than 20 locations on the South Shore.

For more information, call the ARC office at 781-335-3023.

Books Cook!

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept telephone registrations for grades one and two "Books Cook" program by calling 781-383-4109.

Books Cook for grades one and two will be held from 3:15-4:45 p.m. on Wednesdays, and will be held at the Joseph P. Osgood School. Children will enjoy making bread boas after reading "The Day Jimmy's Boa Ate the Wash" or making yummy candy houses after reading "Hansel and Gretel," as examples.

The program will be five weeks in duration, costing $55 per child. Programs are scheduled to begin Wednesday, Oct. 23 and will continue through Nov. 20. Each week will feature different books and cooking.

PAC to meet Oct. 2

The Cohasset PAC (Parents Advisory Council) will meet at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday, Oct. 2 in the Osgood School Music room. The meeting is open to parents of children with special needs and other interested citizens. For information call, Beverly Koswick, 383-2751 or Wendy Kennedy 383-6008.

MAKE SURE A LEFT TURN ISN'T A TURN FOR THE WORSE

Turning Left – Cars or trucks turning left in front of an oncoming motorcycle cause many crashes. It is often difficult for a driver to see a motorcycle coming through traffic and judge the motorcyclist's speed. Before making a left turn, look twice at an approaching motorcycle and make sure it is safe to proceed.

Whether you're a new or experienced rider, take a Motorcycle Safety Course. And when you're behind the wheel, remember...

Lions Gate roars for '20s garden party benefit

CHS sophomores MacKenzie Holway and Nicole Whitney volunteered their time to greet arrivals at the estate which dates back to 1904. The event raised money for the Our World Children's Global Discovery Museum.

Third time's a charm

Comedy Night opens new season at No-Wey Cafe

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Live comedy is back for another season in North Weymouth at the No-Wey Cafe, this time with a twist or two.

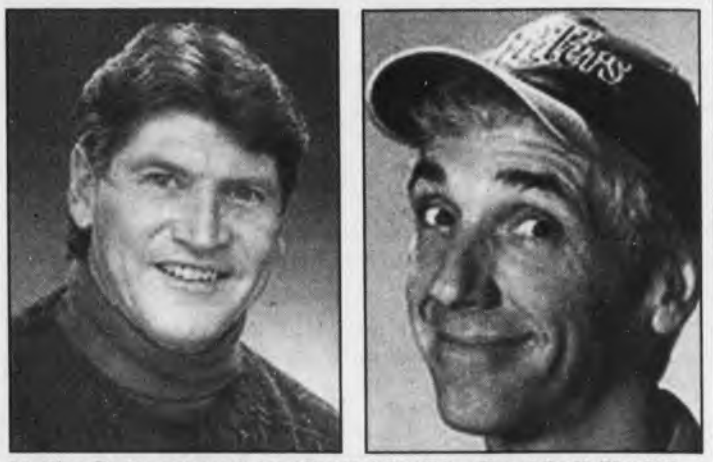
What began as a mild gamble two years ago has turned into a staple of accessible, bargain-priced night-out entertainment on the South Shore. For reasons of both amusement and practicality, the No-Wey's monthly Comedy Night series has gained a foothold with a loyal and steady following, according to Weymouth residents and series originators, Cafe owner Art Tagliaferri and regular Comedy Night emcee Bob Niles.

Sometime last season, we started noticing a good amount of repeat business, and felt like we were building something of a reputation. By our last show in June, we were getting consistently good crowds and a regular following. It's become a sort of self-perpetuating thing."

No-Wey Café Comedy Night emcee Bob Niles

The third season of Comedy Night kicks off Saturday (Sept. 28) at 9 p.m. The show stars headliner and longtime Boston area comic Larry Norton, plus a newcomer to the live comedy stage from Braintree, Jack Hurney, and in a first step to broaden the scope of the comedy series, live music with the South Shore-based folksinging vocal/guitar duo (serious, not comedic, no less) Ivy & Larry.

"Like anything else starting out, we really had to hustle to get the publicity and word-of-mouth out when we began the comedy series two year ago," said Niles. "But sometime last season, we started noticing a good amount of repeat business, and felt like we were building something of a reputation.



Longtime Boston area comic Larry Norton, left, will headline at the No-Wey Café as it kicks off its third year of the Comedy Night series Sept. 28. Comedy Night regular Bob Niles, right, will be back as emcee.

By our last show in June, we were getting consistently good crowds and a regular following. At this point, we don't feel we have to hype the series quite as much, it's become a sort of self-perpetuating thing."

Niles is a veteran Boston-based comic who has worked the mike in clubs for well over a decade, when not busy in his regular career gig as a welder in Weymouth. His impressive list of comedic credits includes appearances all over New England and New York, among them a memorable date opening for Rock and Roll Hall of Famers the Young Rascals in Providence two years ago.

It was through his day job that Niles met rookie comic Hurney, who himself is an electrician with union Local 103, and who the emcee said has a very natural comedic nature. But first, in regard to headliner Norton, "The Comic On the Harley," as he is widely known in the business, is so dubbed because of his custom to ride his Harley two-wheeler pretty much everywhere he goes, even to performances in good and sometimes bad weather.

Norton has been a nationally known, Boston-bred comic for close to two decades. Described by Tagliaferri as an exciting performer and consummate storyteller, the comedian is also known for hilarious impressions in his live sets, including Mel Blanc-style cartoon voices and the like. Norton has spent the last five years living and working in Florida and his No-Wey date will be his first Massachusetts appearance since then.

Hurney has just recently begun making local live standup appearances at the urging of his friend and co-worker Niles. Saturday's show will be only his third professional date overall and Niles further describes him as confident onstage and at ease with a microphone.

Ivy & Larry is the twosome of vocalist Ivy Dever and guitarist Larry Horton. Dever is a Braintree native who Niles heard recently at Cambridge's Kendall Cafe and was so impressed by her distinct, strong vocal style that her urged Tagliaferri to expand the Comedy Night format to music by booking her duo with Horton, a South Shore-based player with some thirty years experience in numerous rock and folk bands. Niles said he most closely compares Dever's way with a song to Stoughton folk club favorite Lori McKenna.

Norton has been a nationally known, Boston-bred comic for close to two decades. Described as an exciting performer and consummate storyteller, the comedian is also known for hilarious impressions in his live sets, including Mel Blanc-style cartoon voices and the like.

"We were thinking of ways we could draw different types of clientele to possibly expand on the audience we have already, and the idea of a folk/acoustic music act seemed like a good way to go," Niles said. "This singer has a really good voice and I think people are going to like her a lot."

Tickets for Comedy Night at the No. Wey Café are $10 and can be purchased by calling (781) 340-1879 or (781) 337-1020.

Chan has never been afraid to ham it up for the camera.

From Hong Kong to Hollywood

Chan makes millions mixing martial arts and humor

By Ed Symkus
SENIOR STAFF WRITER

For decades, James Brown has deserved the moniker "the hardest working man in show business." But the Godfather of Soul, who has an amusing cameo appearance in the new Jackie Chan film, "The Tuxedo," may have to move over. The affable, excitable, good-humored Chan may now deserve the title.

Entering his 40th year in the film business — he started acting in Hong Kong at the age of 7 — Chan is on a roll. His string of recent box office successes, including "Rumble in the Bronx," "Rush Hour," "Shanghai Noon" and "Rush Hour 2," have bumped him up into the $20 million club — that's $20 million per film. And he's not about to slow down.

Since he finished "The Tuxedo" almost a year ago, he starred in the upcoming "Highbinders" opposite comic actor Lee Evans, and he completed filming the "Shanghai Noon" sequel, "Shanghai Knights," again opposite Owen Wilson. He's now back in Hong Kong to star in the Mandarin-language film "Titanium Ring" and in November he'll begin rehearsals for a remake of "Around the World in 80 Days," in which he'll star as Phileas Fogg. When that dust settles, he'll begin work opposite Chris Tucker on "Rush Hour 3," and if the script ever gets finished, he'll do "Nosebleed," with Roberto Begnini.

"But you don't even need a script," he shouts happily. "Begnini! Jackie Chan! You don't need a script."

He's only kidding, but he's got a point, since he and Begnini are masters of physical comedy. But Chan also knows the intricacies of moviemaking. His education came from his 10 years at the Peking Opera School and from on-the-job training, first as a stuntman and then as a stunt coordinator.

"When I was a stunt coordinator, I realized that some directors didn't know how to fight, didn't know what an action movie was," he says. "So I decided to be a director myself. But then I found out that there was no actor who could fight. So I wanted to be an actor and direct myself. Then I found out that the scripts weren't right for action sequences. So I wrote my own scripts. And I started producing by myself and editing by myself. And soon I started hiring directors and training them. And when I started training young stuntmen, I had them watch me editing. I told them, 'If you want to be a good stunt coordinator, you have to know how to edit a scene.'"

Really good rice pudding

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Bad rice pudding is inedible regardless of whether it is baked in the oven (heavy and custardy) or when made on the stovetop (thick and indigestible). The other problem with rice pudding is that it is time consuming – many recipes take up to 2 hours of simmering. I wanted to taste the rice, not just the dairy, wanted some interesting flavors, and wanted it quick – a half hour was my outside time limit.

I started with the notion of stovetop cooking using Arborio rice (it is starchy and available everywhere), a liquid (water and/or dairy), sugar, and flavorings. Some recipes (including one of my own) start by cooking the rice in water and then cooking it in milk. This tasted just fine but took an hour and a half. My next step was to combine the water and dairy (in this case, milk) and cook it all at one time. The ratio of liquid to milk in the recipes I examined was from 4 cups liquid to 3 tablespoons rice to 5 cups liquid to 1 cup rice. I decided on splitting the difference, using 4 cups of liquid (3 cups milk, 1 cup water) to a half cup rice. The good news was that I made rice pudding in 30 minutes by simmering it on the stovetop; the bad news was that it was much too thick and "milky" and I needed to infuse some flavors to punch up the dish.

My first thought was to add more rice. I tried 3/4 cup and then settled on a full cup. I was surprised that I did not need to add more liquid and, this time, the rice had a bit more tooth, although it was fully cooked. (I also tested long and medium-grain rice, both of which rendered a thinner pudding; Thai sticky rice and sushi rice both produced a gooey dessert.) Next, I kept dropping the ratio of milk to water, finally ending up with 2 1/2 cups of water to 1 1/2 cups milk. Now the texture was lighter and brighter. I ended up preferring half and half to milk (it was a bit smoother and creamier) although either is fine.

As far as sugar goes, I started with 1/4 cup, increased it to 5 tablespoons, and finally settled on 1/3 cup – just enough to add flavor but not enough to make it sticky sweet. Two teaspoons of orange zest added at the end gave this sleepy dish some bite and vanilla extract rounded out the flavors. In an effort to add some texture, chopped pistachios sprinkled on top were just the thing, adding a lot more flavor than almonds. Still, this rice pudding tasted a bit flat so I added 1/4 teaspoon of salt, an ingredient that turned out to be obvious but essential. Finally, I came up with a rum/raisin variation for those more traditional about their tastes in rice pudding.

QUICK RICE PUDDING

Pistachios can be toasted in a 350 degree oven for about seven minutes or in a dry skillet over medium heat for about five minutes or until very lightly colored and fragrant. I prefer this dish served warm (it can be served cold as well) and it can also be served as a porridge for breakfast.

1 cup arborio rice
2 1/2 cups water
1 1/2 cups half and half or whole milk
1/3 cup granulated sugar
1/4 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon vanilla
2 teaspoons finely chopped orange zest
1/4 cup finely chopped toasted pistachios

Place the rice, water, half-and-half, sugar and salt in a large saucepan over medium heat. Bring to a boil and adjust heat to maintain a gentle simmer. Cook uncovered for about 30 minutes, stirring occasionally, or until the mixture is quite thick but still wet. The pudding will thicken further as it cools. Off heat stir in the vanilla and orange zest. Serve warm, at room temperature or cold topped with the pistachios.

Serves 4

Rum Raisin Variation

Omit the vanilla, orange zest and pistachios. Add one 2 to 3-inch piece of cinnamon bark to the saucepan along with the other ingredients. Meanwhile soak 1/3-cup raisins in 1/4-cup dark rum. Once the pudding has cooked for twenty-five minutes add the rum-raisin mixture to the pudding for the final minutes of cooking.

And slowly, I put together my own team."

But Chan, 48, who stands at 5'9" and weighs in at 168 pounds, is always a driving force on a film, even if he isn't directing it.

In "The Tuxedo," he plays the limo driver of a secret agent, but when he dons his boss' super-powered Armani-designed monkey suit, he finds himself being mistaken for the agent.

"When action scenes were coming up, I told [director] Kevin [Donovan] where I should stand, where I should be going," says Chan. "Then I would ask him what he wanted in certain scenes. He would say a certain kind of thing. So I would say, 'What about this, this and this?' Then he would show me where he wanted to put a special effect. Then we would compromise over everything."

The only real difficulty Chan encountered was the fact that is character was supposed to be awkward and totally unfamiliar with the art of fighting, when in reality Chan is graceful and is a combat master.

"In the beginning I had to hunch my back and try to walk funny," he says. "After I put on the tuxedo, I straightened my body. To pretend not to know how to fight is very difficult."

"In the beginning I had to hunch my back and try to walk funny. After I put on the tuxedo, I straightened my body. To pretend not to know how to fight is very difficult."

Jackie Chan

Chan's ability to fight has garnered him a huge international fan base. But it took him a long time to break into the American market. In the mid-'80s, he costarred in the flops "Cannonball Run" and "Cannonball Run 2," then went back to Hong Kong with his tail between his legs, and made hits such as "Police Story, Armor of God" and "Project A."

"Then all those videos came to Chinatowns in America," says Chan. "Many Chinese families sent their children to America. Some of the boys had a girlfriend who was American, or maybe she had a boyfriend who was American. They would bring them to Chinatown to get a Jackie Chan movie, and that slowly introduced me to American audiences. And later, the school children would see my movies. And there was good word-of-mouth.

"Suddenly I made 'Rumble in the Bronx' with a little more English — because it took place in New York — and then the studios recognized me," he adds. "They bought the movie, called me to redub some dialogue in English, and boom! So it wasn't because of 'Rumble in the Bronx.' It was because the audience was ready. And 'Rumble' helped me to make 'Rush Hour.' And everybody went to see it. Then audiences started looking back at my old movies, and then came 'Shanghai Noon' and 'Rush Hour 2' — Boom! More success."

"The Tuxedo" opens nationally on Sept. 27.

Add color to the early autumn garden

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Throughout the fall season, Mother Nature's little creatures scurry about our landscapes gathering food and making preparations for the chilly days ahead. Squirrels and chipmunks dart across the lawn, their cheek pouches filled with nuts and seeds or precious spring-flowering bulbs uprooted from our flowerbeds. Skunks and raccoons leave telltale holes in our lawns and gardens as they forage for grubs and other soil borne bugs. Occasionally, they may raid our trash in their instinctive quest for food to sustain them once the snow flies.

Overhead, the distinctive honks of Canadian geese and the noisy chatter of blackbirds roosting in the treetops are sure indications that the fall season is upon us. Migrating warblers flit about in the thickets. Hummingbirds quickly empty feeders and probe the depths of lingering flowers for energy-rich nectar. Twittering goldfinches scatter as I approach my gardens only to reappear moments later and resume plucking seeds from the heads of purple coneflowers, black-eyed Susans, cosmos and alliums. Chickadees and tufted titmice join the finches, perching atop seed heads which often bend over as they alight and spring back as the small birds move from stem to stem.

For migrating birds, substantial quantities of seeds, fruits and insects must be consumed during the fall season to provide the energy essential for their survival during the long, arduous journey south to warmer climates. Year-round avian residents join the feeding frenzy, devouring berries and frequenting bird feeders as they fatten up to endure winter weather. Some species, including blue jays, may be seen hiding acorns and seeds, presumably to be recovered later in the season.

Butterflies drift through the landscape on warm, sunny days, sipping nectar as they float from flower to flower. During the latter half of September, Monarch butterflies tend to be particularly plentiful, especially in coastal areas, as eastern residents of this species prepare to make their miraculous journey to the mountains of Mexico. Although scarce this season due to a severe freeze this past winter, these handsome black and orange butterflies are likely to be seen on butterfly bushes, asters, goldenrod or sedums.

September is a month of transition in the garden. Shorter day length initiates the dormant phase of many of our early blooming perennials causing foliage to yellow as the plants store energy to survive the winter ahead. Plants seem to flop and sprawl and the perennial border may become a bit unsightly but with a little weeding and trimming, the garden can regain its tidy appearance. Be sure to leave seed heads behind for the birds and to provide winter interest. Add a few fall bloomers to provide colorful accents and extend the bloom season.

Container gardens may also benefit from a facelift during the waning days of the growing season. Just as we grow tired of our summer attire and don our new fall wardrobes, so our planters seem to require updating at this time of year. Leggy, overgrown annuals lose their appeal and even colorful, robust plantings may become tiresome. Replacing just a few straggly plants with brightly colored chrysanthemums, ornamental peppers, kale or asters can tremendously improve the overall appearance of a whiskey barrel or plant box. Although many gardeners become ruthless and start from scratch, I enjoy the mature trailing plants and find just a few substitutions sufficient to give my containers a fresh, new look.

Perhaps the most popular additions to the fall landscape are chrysanthemums. Extensively hybridized over hundreds of years to produce an endless array of flower forms and colors, these vigorous clump-formers are available at every nursery, roadside stand and grocery store. Nearly all possess strongly aromatic foliage and branched, woody stems. There are so many from which to choose, it can be overwhelming trying to make a decision. Select plants with only a few blossoms open for the longest display. With early, mid-season and late-blooming varieties, it is often wise to grow some of each to extend the bloom season.

Chrysanthemums are technically hardy perennials but often succumb during the winter months. Plants that show evidence of new foliage growth around the base of their stems in their containers are the most likely to multiply and return next season. Plant as early as possible giving the mums full sun in fertile, moisture-retentive, but well-drained soils. Add peat, compost or well-rotted manure to sandy or heavy soils. Be sure to spread the roots of potbound specimens and water regularly to ensure their ability to become established in a well-prepared planting hole.

When plants finish blooming in late autumn, cut back their stems to a few inches tall and once the ground has frozen, apply a light winter mulch such as pine needles. It is critical that this cover, and any other soggy debris that may have accumulated over the winter, be removed in early spring to prevent rotting and disease. Divide every other year using the soft new growth around the perimeter of the clump and discard the old, woody centers. Pinch back stems around Memorial Day and July 4th for bushier, compact plants with more flowers and to delay flowering until fall.

The addition of a few colorful, fall-blooming mums will provide instant color and extended beauty for the weeks to come. Snip a few blossoms to bring a touch of autumn indoors.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 25
The moon continues its travel in practical Taurus throughout the day. A harmonious contact to Mars adds an energy boost this morning. Take on a big work project; you can get a lot accomplished. Influences are ideal for cleaning out and getting rid of items that are no longer useful or valuable. Plan a quiet evening. Enjoy a romantic dinner with the love in your life.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 26
This morning may be slow-starting. Don't take on more than you can handle. Enjoy a relaxed, leisurely pace. The Taurus moon aligns with Uranus at 5:27 a.m. and becomes inactive. Planetary influences turn around completely at 2:26 p.m., when the moon enters lively Gemini. Because Gemini is ruled by retrograde Mercury, this two and one-half day period may be difficult and frustrating. Things won't go as planned. There are likely to be upsets, breakdowns, reversals.

FRIDAY, SEPT. 27
Wake up in a good mood. This day has its challenges. The moon travels in Gemini, forming four major alignments to planets. In addition, the sun and retrograde Mercury conjoin. That means that new starts or signings are definitely off limits. Expect the unexpected. Projects may take unanticipated turns. People are likely to be late for appointments. Choose your words carefully. Avoid confrontations this evening, when the moon opposes Pluto.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 28
The moon continues to travel in Gemini; it forms stressful contacts to Mars in the morning and Saturn in the evening, when it becomes inactive. Think before you do or say anything you will later regret. Careless or insensitive remarks will come back to haunt you. Spend time alone; look within for answers, and you will find what you need to get back on track.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 29
At 1:01 a.m. the moon enters Cancer, placing the focus on family and domestic responsibilities. This is a great day to tackle projects around the home, like remodeling or repainting. Be more nurturing and sensitive to the needs of loved ones. Go on a cooking or baking spree. The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 1:03 p.m. A new moon will culminate October 6.

MONDAY, SEPT. 30
The moon continues to travel in emotional Cancer all day. Avoid getting caught up in morning hassles or the blues. Be sure to initiate new activities before 2:59 p.m., when the Cancer moon aligns with Mars and becomes inactive. Influences are prime for cleaning out and reorganizing. Get your life in order. Plan a quiet evening. Renew your spirit through time spent in solitude, meditation, art or nature.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 1
October brings its share of challenging planetary influences. The good news is that Mercury turns direct on October 6, when a new moon occurs. However, a few days later Venus and Saturn begin retrograde travel. The combination of a Leo moon and sun-Neptune alignment makes today prime for vacationing. At 7:58 a.m. the moon enters Leo, remaining there for the next 2 1/2 days. The sun-Neptune alignment occurs at 11:50 a.m., and the moon interacts with the sun and Neptune this evening. Enjoy favorite leisure activities; follow your bliss.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 2
Retrograde Mercury returns to the sign Virgo at 5:27 a.m. and prepares to align with Saturn. All important decisions, signings or new beginnings are definitely off limits. The Leo moon interacts with Venus and Pluto this morning, prompting you to review your priorities and readjust your sights. Be more forgiving and sensitive to the needs of others. Work out differences and heal relationships that have broken down. Pursue activities that help you to relax and maintain perspective.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 3
Wake up in a good mood. Focus on the positives instead of getting caught up in worries or self-doubts. Take on a busy work agenda. Tackle jobs that have been left hanging and need a finishing touch. Clean out the clutter; reorganize, make repairs. The Leo moon becomes inactive at 9:16 a.m., when it aligns with Saturn. A Virgo moon takes over at 10:52 a.m., setting the stage for a challenging 2 1/2 day period. Retrograde Mercury forms a stressful 90-degree alignment to Saturn at 7:10 p.m.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 4
The moon continues to travel in Virgo, ruled by the planet Mercury. That means that there are likely to be unexpected snags or reversals. Allow extra time; be flexible. A lunar alignment to Pluto at 11:37 a.m. may spark emotional thunderstorms. Stay busy with practical projects; jobs that need to be finished or redone. Zero in on health and physical fitness concerns. Start a new diet; spend extra time working out with exercise programs.

TRAINING FOR NEW POOL OF SWIM VOLUNTEERS Swim With A Special Child hopes to expand its pool of volunteers as the program plunges into its 31st year of weekly swim classes for students with mental and/or physical disabilities. SWASC will hold orientation and training sessions for new and returning volunteers Sept. 17 and 24 from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. at the Massachusetts Hospital School in Canton. Free child care is provided for training and for weekly Tuesday classes beginning Oct. 1. Swimmers of all ability levels are needed to swim one-on-one with students age 3 to 22. No special skills are required, and a SWASC staff of class leaders and swim instructors works with each pair of swim buddies. Volunteers may swim for one, two or all three class sessions on Tuesdays from 9:15 to 11:45 a.m., Johnson said, and "floaters" and "snowbirds" are also welcome to come when they can.

PARENTAL STRESS LINE: Make a difference for children and their parents. parents' and children's services needs volunteers as telephone counselors for the parental Stress Line. A comprehensive training is given and volunteers can choose from a weekly three and a half hour shift, day or evening, weekday or weekends. Located by the Back Bay T stop. There is training class scheduled for Sept. 28, at 10 a.m.

THE CHILDREN'S MUSEUM IN EASTON is sprucing up for the busy year ahead as it closes its doors for its annual Fall Spruceup from Sunday, Sept. 1 through 16. Volunteers are needed. If you can clean, paint, sew and mend, launder, do light carpentry or have any other skills, we can use you. For more information call 508-230-3789.

BIG SISTER ASSOCIATION IS SEEKING VOLUNTEERS Offer support and friendship to a girl between the ages of 7 and 15. Big Sister Association of Greater Boston offers monthly information sessions in the Quincy office, 1458 Hancock St., and weekly ones at the Boston office. An informational session will be held Sept. 18 from noon to 1 p.m. and 6 to 7 p.m. in Quincy. Call 617-328-1061 or 617-236-8060 or visit www.bigsister.org.

SOUTH SHORE THERAPEUTIC RIDING seeks volunteers There are a group of kids from the South Shore who need your help this fall. A long waiting list of riders with cerebral palsy, autism, and other motor dysfunctions are waiting for treatment involving horse back riding (called hippotherapy), but the program needs volunteers. "Sidewalkers" walk along beside the horse while the physical or occupational therapist works with the patient. A "horse leader," who is experienced working with horses, leads the horse. Sidewalkers do not need to know anything about horses or physical therapy but they must be great cheerleaders and ready to lend a steady hand to some of the most courageous riders on the South Shore.

Sidewalkers and horse leaders can be an adult or teen, and simply must commit to one or two hours per week, walking beside Peaches or Tilly as these gentle horses and therapist Cindy Spooner help disabled clients gain strength and coordination through riding. Call Cindy Spooner at 781-826-4970 if you can spend an hour or two a week helping some of these aspiring riders realize a dream at River Wind Farm in Pembroke. All volunteers will be trained. Both sidewalkers and horse leaders are needed.

ALZHEIMERS ASSOCIATION, GREATER BOSTON Volunteers are needed to help organize walkers, work on logistics, and help along the walk route for the 10th Annual Alzheimer's Association Greater Boston Memory Walk on Sept. 22. The walk, begins and ends at Canal Park at the Cambridgeside Galleria in Cambridge, benefits the Alzheimer's Association's programs that provide care and support for individuals and families touched by the disease. Volunteer and make a difference. For more information call the Alzheimer's Association at 617-868-6718 x 208 or email memorywalk@alzmass.org

KINGSTON COUNCIL ON AGING needs volunteers to deliver Meals On Wheels to Homebound elders. Mileage reimbursement is available. Contact the Council On Aging at 781-585-0511 or 781-585-0512.

VISION COMMUNITY SERVICES (A Division of the Massachusetts Association for the Blind). Did you know that your eyesight can be as valuable to others as it is for you? Vision Community Services needs volunteers to read or shop with a blind neighbor, to help that person maintain independence. Two hours per week and a desire to help is all you need; hours are flexible. We'll provide the training and support. Opportunities are available throughout Massachusetts. Mass. Wants board to reiterate opposition to field naming

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

What's in a name?

If you are talking about the new ball fields at the site of the old gravel pits – everything.

In a debate that refuses to go away, Selectman Tom Callahan, citing support from fellow member Ronnie McMorris (who was not present at the meeting), challenged his fellow board members not to back down on their opposition to the Little League selling the naming rights to the new fields. Callahan made his comments during the board's meeting Tuesday.

"The decision shouldn't have been made for us and hoisted upon us in this way," said Callahan. "We were put up against the wall and I think that some of the selectmen are feeling the pressure that we have a bill to pay and no way to pay it."

The project was funded by a $200,000 appropriation from the general fund at last year's town meeting, a $100,000 fund from the Community Preservation Committee, and a $150,000 commitment from the Little League.

As part of the $150,000 that Little League has raised for the $450,000 project, $100,000 was pledged on a naming rights commitment.

The Red Lion Inn contributed $50,000 to the fields and asked for the right to name the three field complex through commu-

Town picks Realtor to promote Pratt

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The town has chosen Grand Gables Realty Group Inc. of North Scituate to market the Paul Pratt Library.

Town Manager Mark Haddad had been talking to area Realtors in an effort to secure a better price for the library. Twice, the property has gone out to bid and twice, the town has not received an adequate selling price. The town needs to recoup at least $700,000 for the property as that money is directly tied to the remodeling of the old Osgood School into the new Paul Pratt Library. According to Town Manager Mark Haddad, the new library will be completed in January and the move from the old building will take place in February.

"I'm very excited," Haddad said about selecting a Realtor. "I'll tell you right now it was tough, because I think that all of the Realtors who came to the table would do a great job for us, and I just had to go with somebody."

In order to comply with state regulations, the property will still have to go out to bid. Grand Gables' role will be to bring a buyer to the table for that bidding process. Final details of the deal have yet to be decided.

Campaign kicks into high gear

Hedlund, LeClair define issued

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

The sorry condition of state government tops the list of issues as incumbent state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and challenger Ted LeClair, D-Marshfield, rev up towards the Nov. 5 election for the state Senate seat in the Plymouth/Norfolk District.

Other issues are the yet-to-be-achieved cardiac surgery license for South Shore Hospital, education, the state tax hike, and Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law.

Neither Hedlund nor LeClair has kudos for the goings-on on Beacon Hill, where the budget crisis seems to worsen daily, but they differ on how the legislative quagmire should be approached.

Hedlund said the lack of a strong two-party system is part of the problem.

"They're like lemmings up here," Hedlund said. "State government is currently a disaster, from a financial standpoint and a process standpoint. If the people knew how legislative leadership is letting things function, they would revolt. One

Improvement ideas floated for harbor

Upcoming meeting targeted for discussion

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Town Manager Mark Haddad scheduled 15 minutes at Tuesday's selectmen's meeting for Dean Rizzo of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation to talk about the group's plans for possible improvements to the Harbor.

It wasn't even close to enough.

In order to gather public opinion on the subject and digest the issue, the decision – and discussion – were put off until the board's next meeting on Oct. 8.

Rizzo said it was important to have the support of the selectmen, at least in principal, before it invests more money into the project.

But, approximately 15 area residents attended the meeting and what was meant to be a quick overview quickly devolved into a debate.

The fence at the site seemed to generate the most interest. Currently the fence consists of two horizontal beams placed on posts about six feet apart. The fence as it stands, is grandfathered in, but if it is changed in any way, it must be brought up to code.

However, if the fence is replaced and brought up to standards, the state transportation grant could be applied to $1 million of the $1.3 million price tag on the project. That grant provides 90 percent funding for a project, but takes into consideration planning that is already completed. With the planning provided free to the town by the CRC, the level of funding for the sidewalk and fence restoration could reach 100 percent. The remaining portion of the

Part of Elm St. to become one way

The Board of Selectmen has decided to make the downtown portion of Elm Street one way on a one-month trial basis, after receiving positive feedback from area business owners.

The idea was floated by Town Manager Mark Haddad at previous selectmen meetings and culminated in a visit to the local businesses by Haddad, Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan, and Craig Miller of the Waterfield Design Group.

The street would become one way from the Hingham Institute for Saving to the Cohasset Hardware Store.

The new regulation will take effect from Oct. 14 to Nov. 15, at which time the board will re-asses the situation.

ZBA schedule set

The Zoning Board of Appeals has announced its tentative schedule for meeting in the upcoming months, both for the AvalonBay 40B hearing and their regularly scheduled hearings.

All AvalonBay hearings will be held in the selectmen's office and will be televised.

Public comment on the issue will be held until all of the evidence had been presented, but at that time there will be ample opportunity for all relevant questions and comments to be heard.

The schedule is as follows:

Mon., Oct. 21, 7:30 p.m., regular meeting.

Mon., Oct. 28, 7:30 p.m., Avalon hearing. – Avalon's presentation

Mon., Nov. 4, 7:30 p.m., regular meeting.

Wed., Nov. 13, 7:30 p.m., Avalon hearing – Avalon's presentation

Mon., Dec. 9, 7:30 p.m., regular meeting.

Mon., Dec. 16, 7:30 p.m., Avalon hearing – Input from Town of Cohasset Boards.

Reservoir capacity continues to withstand drought

While Southeastern Massachusetts is still in a drought "watch" status, dozens of cities and towns still have outside watering bans, and the rest of the state is in a continuing drought advisory, Cohasset's Aaron River Reservoir is still almost completely full.

"The Reservoir is holding at about 80 percent of capacity," said John McNabb, chairman of the Cohasset Water Commission. "Which means that we have continued to successfully withstand one of the worst droughts in decades, and we still have more than enough water to provide all of Cohasset's needs. Compare this to the Summer of 1997, when the Reservoir was at about 50 percent of capacity and there was no need to consider an outside watering ban."

"Unlike just about every other town on the East Coast, the Cohasset Water Department did not impose restrictions on outside watering this year, and" said McNabb, "because of the continued healthy condition of the Reservoir, we do not anticipate any need to do so."

"This situation is largely due to the vision of the Water Commission and the Town in the 1970s, when the Reservoir and the Lily Pond Treatment Plant was constructed, and because of the support we have received from the Town over the years, and we want to thank the Town once again for providing the Water Department with this support," said McNabb

"When full, the Aaron River Reservoir contains 323 million gallons of water," said McNabb. "This should give confidence to the people of Cohasset that we have more than enough water for our needs now and into the future."

"Cohasset's water supply, which includes Lily Pond and the Aaron River Reservoir," said McNabb, "has a "safe yield" of 3.5 million gallons a day. This is much greater than our average demand of 710,000 gallons a day and our projected water demand twenty years or more into the future."

"The Cohasset Water Dept. has not had an outside watering ban since 1995, said McNabb, "because of the massive size of our water supply. The outside watering bans we had in 1994 and 1995 were because of problems in our distribution system, which have been fixed, and because of our ongoing water system capital improvements program."

Bids requested for water treatment plant improvements

The Water Commission has issued Request for Bids for construction of improvements to the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant. Sealed Bids for this project are due no later than 2 p.m., Nov. 6, at the Town Manager's office at Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave., Cohasset.

"These improvements will help improve the operation of the Lily Pond Treatment Plant by allowing the Plant, for the first time, to produce water continuously, and will benefit all of our ratepayers," said John McNabb, Chairman of the Water Commission.

This project include installation of Variable Frequency Drives (VFD's) on the finished water pumps, new finished water pumps, and flow paced chemical feeds to automatically regulate the injection of treatment plant chemicals into the water.

The project is planned to commence no later than January 1, and be finished by June 1, 2003. Plans and specifications are available from Weston & Sampson Engineers, Inc. at their offices a 5 Centennial Drive, Peabody, Mass. for $50.

Main replacement program begins

Water Department contractor D&C Construction has begun the Water Commission's new water main replacement program, which will replace about 1.2 miles of undersized water pipes to improve fire protection and water service throughout Cohasset.

The schedule for construction is as follows:

September 2002

Begin Lothrop Lane, to replace approximately 1,000 feet of undersized 6-inch pipe with 8-inch Ductile Iron Pipe

Begin Redgate Lane, to replace approximately 1,050 feet of undersized 6-inch pipe with 8-inch Ductile Iron Pipe

October 2002

Begin Hobart Lane, to replace approximately 1350 feet of undersized 2-inch pipe and 6-inch pipe with 8-inch Ductile Iron Pipe

November 2002

Begin Sheldon Road, to replace approximately 500 feet of undersized 2-inch and 6-inch pipe with 8-inch Ductile Iron Pipe

December 2002

Begin Windsor Road/Westgate Lane, to replace approximately 900 feet of undersized 2-inch pipe with 8-inch Ductile Iron Pipe

January 2003

Replace Fire Hydrants on Church St and Evergreen Ln.

Begin Nichols Rd, replace 8-inch water main located in Cat Dam Bridge to restore Nichols Road water distribution loop.

Begin drainage project at Hammond Ave and Locust Rd, install drainage pipe (approximately 1000 feet of 12 to 24-inch drain pipes, and 50 feet of 24x36 Box Culvert) and structures (Drain Manholes Drop Inlets and Catch Basins) to improve drainage conditions.

February 2003

Begin water project at Hammond Ave and Locust Rd,, to replace approximately 200 feet of undersized 2-inch pipe, and create a distribution loop with a 8-inch Ductile Iron Pipe

March 2003

Begin Beechwood Street, to replace isolation valves at intersection of Doane and Beechwood Streets, and to replace approximately 200 feet of undersized 6-inch pipe with 10-inch Ductile Iron Pipe.

Begin Bound Brook Lane, to replace approximately 550 feet of undersized 2-inch pipe with 8-inch Ductile Iron Pipe.

Churches to host parenting seminar

St. John's Episcopal Church, along with the First Church of Christ Scientist, Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, and other area churches, invite you to attend a seminar titled "10 Principles for Spiritual Parenting" to be held Wednesday, Oct. 23 from 7 to 9 p.m. at St. John's church, 172 Main Street, Hingham. The talk will be followed by a book signing and refreshments. The event is free and open to the general public.

"World events have prompted families to search for new ways to become closer to one another and new ways to incorporate a sense of spirituality into their lives," says the Rev. Robert Edson, rector of St. John's. "We are delighted to join with other churches in the area to help all families explore this vital aspect of raising children."

The program will be presented by Mimi Doe, M.Ed., the author of 10 Principles for Spiritual Parenting: Nurturing Your Child's Soul, which won the 1998 Parents' Choice Seal of Approval and was a finalist in the Books for a Better Life Award. Her latest book is Busy, But Balanced: Practical and Inspirational Ways to Create a Calmer, Closer Family. Ladies Home Journal called Mimi "a parenting guru" and her work has been covered in publications such as Child, Parenting, McCalls, Family Circle, Publisher's Weekly, and USA Today. She has appeared on talk radio and television programs including Oprah. Mimi is the co-author of Drawing Angels Near: Children Tell of Angels in Words and Pictures and she holds a master's degree in education from Harvard. Mimi's name is synonymous with spirituality and families. Her workshops and seminars have changed the way thousands of parents interact with the children in their lives. Mimi's popular on-line newsletter, Spiritual Parenting Thought for the Week has over 30,000 subscribers from around the world and she is a parenting expert on Beliefnet.com.

During this non-denominational talk, Mimi will share specific techniques and practical, creative suggestions for ways to nurture and address your child's inner life day to day—how to add magic to the ordinary, make each day a new beginning and release the struggle. For more information about the program, call Amy Tunnicliffe at 749-1836 or Mary Kay Burnett at 383-9644.

Fall special shaping up

Selectmen review draft warrant

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Special Town Meeting season is upon us again and the latest edition, scheduled for Nov. 18, promises to be hotly contested, with issues as far-ranging as an article for a new school bus and a citizen's petition asking the town to declare a moratorium on Chapter 40B affordable housing projects.

Town Manager Mark Haddad declined comment on the warrant, simply because it is not yet in a finalized format. The warrant closed at 4:30 p.m. on Sept 24, just hours before Haddad presented the rough draft to the Board of Selectmen.

"It's so preliminary at this point, because a lot of people will have to come in to give us more information on everything, and we'll have further debate about them," agreed Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan, after the warrant was first presented. "I think that Mark got it all together very quickly, so at least everybody knows, in the public, what's going to be on the warrant so that if they have an interest in getting more information about particular articles, they can start to do so."

Below are the highlights:

- One of the most controversial issues will be the citizen petition articles brought forward by the group Cohasset Action. The articles ask the town will create a plan for affordable housing within the town and to declare a moratorium on Chapter 40B (see related article).
- The School Committee will be asking for an additional $99,000 in funding at the Special Town Meeting, on top of the $100,000 that was held back from its budget at the Annual Town Meeting. The request for additional funds is split up into $60,000 for a school bus, $32,000 to replace grant funding that paid for the elementary school health teachers, and $7,000 to cover the cost of the early retirement of janitor Kevin Soule.
- The warrant also includes an article for $60,000 to hire architects to further design the proposed renovation of the Police/Fire Station on Elm Street.
- There will also be an article that will ask for either a debt exclusion of Proposition 2 fi in order to bury the electrical wires underground in conjunction with the Downtown Revitalization Project. The selectmen are undecided on the matter, but have will let the public debate the issue at Town Meeting.
- The Senior Housing Committee has an article which seeks to create an overlay district for senior housing. Those meetings began Tuesday night with the presentation by the Cohasset Action Group.
- The Community Preservation Committee will present an article to purchase the Barnes property, as well as a secondary small project that will restore the gates of the Beechwood Cemetery.

Articles open door for 40B debate

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The two citizens petition articles aimed at curbing Chapter 40B have been edited and approved by Town Counsel and received a favorable reaction from the Board of Selectmen on Tuesday night.

The articles intent have not changed, but their wording has, in order to correct a violation of the separation of powers. The articles originally mandated that the town take action, first on a plan to meet their 40B requirements, and second to declare a moratorium on 40B affordable housing projects within the town. Since Town Meeting is the legislative body, a directive from them to the town's boards (the executive body) would be illegal.

The original articles will still appear on the warrant, because of the petition, but the Board of Selectmen voted to include the revisions as motions, printed on the warrant, below the articles in order to reduce confusion.

The articles now request that specific town boards take action on creating an affordable housing plan by Jan. 1, 2003. The proponent of the articles, Michael Westcott — the head of the Cohasset Action, the town's anti-40B group — said such a goal could be accomplished in a short time.

"I think they've demonstrated their support," said Westcott. "Everybody still has their individual issues, but overall to get that support was good, I thought it went well."

Cohasset Action formed and brought the articles forward in response to the plans by AvalonBay to build at 200-unit 40B project at 155 King St. The project will not be directly affected by any of these actions, because it has already begun hearings with the town's Zoning Board of Appeals.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said he is pleased to see a group of citizen taking an active role in the town.

"I think it is great to come forward and help," said Sullivan. "There are so many different pieces to this discussion that the more people out doing research on it and bringing it forward the better off the town is."

There was a hearty debate on the issues relative to the subject, but despite many different viewpoints and possible scenarios, it seemed that all involved wanted to insure that the town has as much control as possible over the project.

"Part of the issue is we desperately need to get affordable housing, we frankly need rental housing," said Westcott. "What we can't afford as a town is that much of it all in one fell swoop, all together like that. That's the fundamental issue, because we absolutely need to diversify the housing."

The board did not take a vote on whether to recommend the article at the meeting.

"We'll all slowly reach a conclusion about this issue as a town, but it is not a black and white issue," said Sullivan.

The Portland revisited

Maritime museum hosts underwater archeological exhibit

By Alice Coyle
ACOYLE@CNC.COM

It sank during an epic storm more than 100 years ago.

It was discovered on the ocean floor off Cape Anne by John Fish and Arnie Carr of American Underwater Search and Survey in 1989 and rediscovered in July by Stellwagen Bank Sanctuary and NOAA researchers.

But the mysteries surrounding the ill-fated paddle wheel steamer Portland continue to intrigue and capture the imagination of Scituate Historical Society trustees and authors David Ball and Fred Freitas.

In 1995, Ball and Freitas released "Warnings Ignored," their story of the Portland Gale — an Atlantic tempest that sank 100 ships and claimed some 400 lives up and down the east coast from Virginia to Nova Scotia.

In Scituate, there is a permanent, visible reminder of the storm which literally changed the geography of the town when the raging ocean broke through the North River separating Fourth Cliff, from Third Cliff. Today, the only way to Humarock by land is through Marshfield.

The gale and the wrecked vessel for which it was named will be revisited and remembered this weekend in a special one-day exhibit at Scituate's Maritime and Irish Mossing Museum. The program is being done in conjunction with the state Board of Underwater Archeological Resources to mark Massachusetts Archeology Week.

In the room that houses artifacts from the ship — including two stateroom doors and a life jacket that washed ashore in Provincetown in the storm's wake — the board's assistant director David Truby will bring some of the equipment used to locate wrecks like the Portland.

Truby said the main tool researchers use, the side scan sonar, is a device towed behind the research boat that sends out sound waves that travel through the water column and bounce of anything on the bottom. The sonar then creates an image of the submerged object on a computer screen. Visitors at this weekend's exhibition will get an up-close look at this and other surveying tools.

"We'll have the side scan sonar, the software to show how surveys are done and even some sonar images of famous wrecks, like the Edmund Fitzgerald," said Truby.

Sponsored by the Massachusetts Historical Commission, groups and organizations in towns across the state are doing archeological week programs, said Truby, who noted the Scituate exhibit is the first his board has organized.

And while the program will highlight recent relocation of the Portland, Truby said the Scituate exhibit plan didn't start out that way.

The board, which issues all permits for underwater archeology, became interested in doing a Scituate exhibit when local divers Tom Miloy of Scituate and Bill Carter of Marshfield came in to renew their underwater excavation permits. The two have done extensive work on the Forest Queen — a ship that went aground off Sand Hills in 1853 loaded with the silver that many believe accounted for Irish mosser and immigrant Daniel Ward's fortune. The board had come to know of Scituate's Maritime Museum through Miloy and Carter and even held one of its meetings there about two years ago, Truby said.

"It's very professional and well done," Truby said of the museum.

Its standing exhibit of Portland artifacts made the museum an even more attractive location for an archeology week exhibit, when the wreck of the steamship was relocated in July.

"When the Portland story came out again we decided we could include it in our exhibit," said Truby.

The program which will take place from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday will feature video footage from the recent survey of the Portland wreck, widely known as New England's "Titanic."

While it is not known with certainty the number of lives lost on the Portland — Freitas and Ball have a count of 192 crew and passengers in their book — the tragedy touched hundreds of lives all over the region.

A passenger vessel, the Portland was a 280-foot long, 42-foot wide, side wheel steamer. With a top speed of 15 knots, the Portland traveled between Boston and its home port, Portland, Maine regularly.

In "Warnings Ignored," Ball and Freitas write the Portland's captain, Hollis Blanchard had received weather reports that day indicating a storm was brewing, but probably believed he could outrun it on his return trip to Maine. "The winds had died down and shifted direction earlier in the afternoon, which may have made Blanchard think the storm was heading out to sea," Ball said.

But the Portland's sister ship, The Bay State, remained in port heeding the weather warnings, Hollis ignored.

The Portland departed Boston at 7 p.m., Nov. 26, 1898, with a full load of passengers heading home following the Thanksgiving holiday.

They never made it.

Freitas said debris from the ship began coming ashore in Provincetown, along with bodies by Sunday evening. Only about 35 bodies were ever found — Ball surmises many more must have missed the outer tip of the Cape along with much of the debris from the wrecked ship.

Today, some of the ship's paddle and the engine sit along with the hull in deep waters off Cape Anne. Board of Underwater Archeological Resources Director Victor Mastone was out on the research vessel that relocated the Portland in July. Being aboard when what he called "the big wreck for Massachusetts and all of New England" was found was an amazing experience, Mastone said.

"The Portland is such a mystery," he said. "To be there when it was relocated was very exciting."

Mastone said while NOAA and Stellwagen Bank Sanctuary researchers knew about where the Portland was located, it was not until recently they turned their attention to finding the wreck again. Focused on marine life and resources, the researchers began to focus on cultural resources within the bank, including shipwrecks, Mastone said. With a general knowledge of where the wreck, was researchers began looking for its exact location and hit their target July 27.

"We were not sure at first that we had the Portland," Mastone noted. "We measured it, it looked like the right length so we sent out the ROV — remote operated vehicle."

Once researchers saw the remnants of the side wheel paddle, Mastone said they were sure they had rediscovered the wreck of the Portland.

"It was the right size and there were no other side wheel paddle ships lost in that vicinity," he said.

The depth of the water — a figure NOAA researchers won't reveal to keep the curious from disturbing the site — and its cold temperature has helped to preserve far more of the wood structure than Mastone expected to find. Except for the hull, side paddle and engines, the rest of the ship's superstructure, including all of the staterooms is gone. It is believed that during the height of the storm the superstructure was wiped off, Mastone said.

"Large waves probably knocked the structure off and swamped the vessel," he said, noting "the hull went down and is sitting flat on its bottom and upright."

Still unanswered after 104 years and a haunting question to both Ball and Freitas, is the time the Portland succumbed to the towering seas and raging storm. Watches found on the recovered bodies stopped at 9 o'clock. But Ball and Freitas wonder was it 9 a.m. or p.m. Considering the magnitude of the tragedy and the terrifying conditions the passengers and crew had to endure at the height of the storm, Ball said he has always hoped that the Portland's demise came the following morning and did not extend until 9 p.m. on Nov. 27.

"I just hope those poor people weren't tortured with it for 26 hours," said Ball.

Ball and Frietas both hope the relocation of the Portland will answer some of the questions surrounding the ship and its end.

"There is a lot more to learn on future trips to the wreck," Mastone said. There will be more field work and mapping of the site, which Mastone said has become a nice marine habitat.

"There are a lot of huge cod there."

There are also several gill nets draped over the wreck which researchers discovered when the remote operated vehicle became entangled in them.

Mastone said he is not sure what, if any artifacts may be found within the wrecked vessel and what might be done with items discovered. But a public exhibit, like those that followed the discovery of the Titanic would be of great interest and value especially to the many relatives and descendents of those who lost their lives aboard the Portland.

For now, the only Portland display to see is in Scituate, and Ball and Freitas are pleased to be hosting this unique, collaborative exhibit — a program they hope will expose more area residents to the museum and its collection of historic artifacts and resources.

"We're the only maritime museum that has a standing exhibition on the storm and the wrecks," said Freitas.

The exhibit "Marine Archeology in Massachusetts; Locating Lost Ships and the Forest Queen Site," will be held Saturday, Oct. 5 from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. at Scituate's Maritime and Irish Mossing Museum. The museum is located at 301 Driftway. Admission to the event is free. For more information contact the Massachusetts Board of Underwater Archeological Resources at (617) 626-1032 or the Scituate Historical Society at (781) 545-1083.

For the third season in a row, an "Evening of Song" will be presented at Norwell's Cushing Center on Friday October 4, and Saturday Oct. 5 at 7:30 P. M. Led by musical director and cast member Meri-Lee Mafera (Marshfield), "Evening of Song" will leave you humming some of your favorite tunes from a variety of decades including "Sentimental Journey," "Boogie Woogie Bugle Boy" and "In the Still of the Night" that will delight audiences of all ages. With a talented cast including Virginia Kulka (Norwell), Bill and Brenda McColgan (Whitman) and Michael Hammond (Holbrook), the show's seasoned performers will make for a great evening of entertainment.

Andy Mahony and Peter Kulka, both of Norwell are once again coupled as co-emcees, playing off one another with light comedy between numbers.

The five piece band will include Meri-Lee Mafera at the piano, Tim Maynard (Weymouth) on drums, Connie Reisdorf (Watertown) synthesizer, Brett Willmott (Weymouth) guitar, and Tony Sumbury (Watertown) on bass.

"Talent abounds in the past performances that we've had," says Mafera, "and you won't be disappointed this year either."

The show was originally conceived by Peter Kulka as a way to raise funds for some of the programs of Norwell's American Legion. All proceeds the first year went toward helping the Town of Norwell erect a Veteran's Monument and the common area. Last year's proceeds went to helping the American Red Cross and other noteworthy programs that the Legion sponsors.

This year the proceeds will be directed to additional needs such as hospice care for Legionnaires and continued work on the monument.

Herb Fredrickson, Commander of Norwell's Legion Post is very enthusiastic about the show. "Come on down and enjoy a great night of entertainment while giving support to our noteworthy causes. Everyone who has come to our other performances in the past have really had a great time."

"Each year our audiences keep getting larger," says Kulka. "Last year there was standing room only. When we sang our patriotic songs, there wasn't a dry eye in the audience."

Prices are $20 for general admittance, $15 for seniors and children under 12.

Time may be running out on your claim for compensation.
Recent studies emanating from the National Institutes of Health (NIH) and leading medical centers have reported a significantly higher incidence of infertility, miscarriages, ectopic pregnancies and preterm delivery as a result of in utero exposure to DES (Stilbestrol-Diethylstilbestrol), a synthetic hormone given to pregnant women in the 1950s and 1960s. Even though many years have gone by, you may still have a claim for significant compensation if you act quickly. Medical records are being destroyed and the physicians and pharmacists involved are becoming difficult to locate. Additionally, state statutes of limitations may bar a claim if not pursued diligently. Our firm specializes in DES litigation. We have successfully represented hundreds of DES victims during the past 20 years. We can obtain your medical records, have our in-house medical professionals evaluate them and, if your claim is meritorious, we will prosecute on your behalf on a contingency basis.

SAFEGUARDING YOUR KIDS

Calling all parents of children in Seventh Grade. This coming Tuesday, Oct. 8, is the Project Safeguard program for students and their parents. The program kicks off at 7:30 am on the Town Common and runs till noon. Make the plans to come and spend this time with your child as the information is so important to hear and share together.

Seventh grade students at Cohasset Middle School will be participating in this special program known as Cohasset Project SAFEGUARD. What makes this program special is the fact that it attempts to involve the entire community in helping young people avoid making harmful decisions regarding the use and abuse of alcohol and drugs.

Alcohol and drug abuse is well recognized as a societal problem that has many contributing factors. The Project SAFEGUARD Committee, comprised of educators, clergy, and parents, believes that the cooperation of the entire community is necessary if the drug and alcohol abuse problem is going to be effectively addressed. Project SAFEGUARD will bring seventh grade students and their parents together for a half-day of presentations and discussion designed to supplement school health education and guidance programs by encouraging students to make healthy choices and by providing support and guidance to parents in their effort to raise "drug free" children.

The Project is subsidized by the Parent-School Organization and community donations making it a true community effort. This year's featured speaker is Ed Gerety. Mr. Gerety is one of America's top youth motivational speakers and leadership trainers. His inspirational, educational, and entertaining messages focus on respect, character, leadership, and personal responsibility.

Students will also view and discuss the play Jesse's Journal, an innovative health program for middle school students developed by The Women's Crisis Center of Newburyport. This presentation uses drama as an educational tool to address a variety of middle school issues including family and peer relationships, appearance and behavior, dating, gender issues, substance use and abuse, and social and academic stress. Cohasset Middle School and High School students will act out the play. In addition, there will be opportunities for small group discussions and interaction among the students and adults.

Parents of seventh grade students, as well as other interested community members are invited and encouraged to attend. The program will utilize a "campus on the common" format beginning at the Cohasset Town Hall at 7:30 A.M. and also making use of the Second Congregational Church and St. Stephen's Church. The program for students will be completed by 11:30 A.M. to be followed by a parent luncheon.

Baker puts feelings to music

Releases CD with his band

By Amanda Gontarz
CORRESPONDENT

"Feelings are feelings no matter who has them," said Steve Baker about the songs on his debut CD with his band, Violet Fame.

A Hull resident who grew up in Cohasset, Baker wrote the six tracks that appear on the disc, entitled Gallery of Hearts, which is being sold on Amazon.com and CDBaby.com. Drawing on his life for inspiration, he said he believes people can connect with the emotions in the songs, a mixture of folk and blues styles.

Steve Baker and his band Violet Fame have performed for years at events around the South Shore.

Steve Baker plays a song from his debut CD, which he recorded over a period of two years.

"Workboot Valley" is a song Baker wrote at a time in his life when he felt financially trapped.

"I was working a lot, but it seemed to be for nothing," he said. "I was working and working, but didn't seem to be moving forward."

Baker and his band have performed for years at events around the South Shore and said he always received a strong reaction for these particular six; thus, they were the ones he chose to record.

Though he's been in a band for a good portion of his life, this is the first attempt Baker has made to record music. He plays all the guitars on the album, which took a couple of years to record and produce, while his fiancée, Nadine Henry, sings the lead vocals.

The couple met when Henry was singing karaoke one night at KoKo Island. Baker said he asked her to join the 30s jazz band he was playing in at the time and a romantic relationship eventually grew out of the collaboration. Baker wrote "21st Century PO Blues" based on Henry's career at the Hingham Post Office.

Baker moved to Cohasset at the age of 12 and attended the high school, during which he took a few music lessons but eventually taught himself to play the guitar. After graduating in 1984, he took a few college courses, but his father soon opened 3A Carpet in Cohasset and Baker was needed in the store, where he has worked ever since.

While Baker has sent the disc into a few local radio stations and has aspirations to break into the music industry, he said he's realistic about it as well.

"I'm not going to quit my day job, but it's something that's always been in the back of my mind," he said.

Being a professional musician, however, is the last thing on Henry's mind.

She said, "I love to sing, but I just do it for fun. This is his dream and I support him completely."

A new approach to learning

School adopts new education theory

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

It seems like a fairly basic concept. Students learn in different ways.

But what to this point was matter of teaching style, is now going to be codified in the Cohasset Public Schools in the form of an educational theory called differentiated learning.

The program is an amalgamation of research over the years that studied how, why, and when students learn. Teachers build lessons plans geared toward students that will teach across multiple intelligences and multiple personalities. It concentrates on creating a safe, effective learning environment that checks for not only attentiveness, but the understanding and retention of ideas. The process has been implemented heavily in special education, but has made inroads into regular education as of late.

"Differentiated learning has been around for a great number of years," said Supt. Edward Malvey. "However, there is a greater emphasis this day and age. There's value for all students, no matter what their learning ability may be."

While the program will be implemented starting this school year, it will take 5-7 years for the full conversion.

"This isn't something that you just pull out and say, 'Right now, Monday morning, we are going to do Differentiated Instruction,'" said Malvey. "It's a way of having teachers look at that learning situation differently then they may have in the past."

That is not to say that the teachers have been doing anything wrong.

"There's value for all students, no matter what their learning ability may be."
Supt. Edward Malvey

"The last thing I would want to happen to teachers would be to look at it and say, 'Here's something now that is being promoted, what are we doing wrong that we have to do this now?" said Malvey. "They're not doing anything wrong , but it is taking the best of what they are doing and the best of what the research is saying and really stepping back and looking at what is happening in that class."

In fact, Malvey thinks that many will find that the basic tenants of differentiated learning are simply good teaching techniques already incorporated into their classrooms.

"They may say, 'Gee, I do many of these things anyway," said Malvey. "But they may not have done it under the rubric of Differentiated Instruction. They may have thought, 'Well, here's an appropriate strategy to use with my student, so I'll do this."

Ultimately, the program should benefit the students.

"We are hopeful that if this gets up and running to a greater extent, each of the students in the class will be able to have varying experiences that are in tune with the way they learn," said Malvey.

But with the statewide assessment test MCAS, still the barometer for academic success, the program's implementation may have to be curbed slightly.

"If we weren't living in the era of standardized testing, that concern may not be as important," said Malvey of catering to standardized education. "By going into differentiated instruction, it may be better for a student individually in terms of how they learn, but the final test still is going to be how do they match up with standardized testing."

That presents a fundamental problem to the district.

"The challenge is 'How do you develop those learning situations for student to meet the content piece, while adjusting for their learning style?" said Malvey.

Over the next five to seven years, that question will be answered.

Watts tapped as special ed leader

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The School Department has hired Karen Watts as an acting Student Services Director to replace out-going director Steve Kaplan, who officially resigned only two weeks ago.

Kaplan, who was lauded by all for resurrecting a special education program that had fallen on hard times financially, left Cohasset to take a position in the Lincoln-Hanscom School District, which is closer to his home.

Watts will oversee special education programs and needs in Cohasset

"Dr. Watts is currently an assistant superintendent for Student Services in Scituate, but she has resigned that position and she is going to be coming to Cohasset on an acting basis for the year," said Malvey.

Malvey cited Watts' strong experience and knowledge as a major factor in the decision.

"This hiring will allow me to do two things," said Malvey. "First of all, I can have an experienced administrator step into that position and secondly, and most importantly, to provide continuity to us because of her knowledge."

The placement of a qualified person in the position is important to maintain the momentum that Kaplan generated.

"(With Watts in place,) we will be able to continue with the corrective action plan that we have filed with the state Department of Education, because of our special education audit," said Malvey.

Watts currently serves as the president of the Special Education Administrators Association

Trust announces challenge grant

Cohasset Conservation Trust president Gary Vanderweil, announced last week that the Cohasset Conservation Trust has offered a $150,000 challenge grant for the acquisition of the Barnes property, in addition to a $100,000 gift.

"The Cohasset Conservation Trust believes the Barnes property is one of the most important properties remaining in Cohasset. That is why the Trust is willing to commit substantial financial support," said Vanderweil. "We sincerely hope the people of Cohasset will get excited about this land purchase and help us raise $300,000 toward the $1 million purchase price of this property."

Recently the town signed a purchase and sales agreement with the Barnes family to purchase the 32-acre parcel, which adjoins Wheelwright Park. Rich Silvia, who spearheaded the negotiations, said the Barnes property has been identified as a rare deep forest core habitat, because it is part of 230 acres of undeveloped land, which also includes the White Holly Farm forest, Wheelwright Park, Witch Hazel Swamp, the Bancroft Bird Sanctuary and the Arthur Lehr Boy Scout Retreat.

"Wildlife biologists told me that if the Barnes property was developed, this deep forest habitat would be greatly harmed and the wildlife living there would be driven out, forced to compete for scarce food and habitat in surrounding neighborhoods," said Silvia.

He added that many people who walk on trails in Wheelwright actually are on the Barnes property some of the time.

So far $600,000 has been committed to the purchase of the land. In addition to the $100,000 gift from the Cohasset Conservation Trust, the selectmen recently voted to give $500,000 from the MBTA's open space acquisition grant to the purchase of the Barnes property.

Stuart Ivimey, chairman of the Community Preservation Committee said, "People look to the CPC, as they should to help fund open space acquisition, but we know there are several other important parcels of land we would like to acquire. Unfortunately we have limited funds, which won't go very far with the price of Cohasset real estate. That is why I am so pleased about the Cohasset Conservation Trust's challenge grant – rarely, if ever, will we have the generosity of the Trust to help us generate such substantial funds. Their generosity will allow us to leverage our limited CPC funds for more open space acquisitions and I urge people to take advantage of this challenge grant to save a very important piece of property."

Debbie Cook, chairman of the Open Space Committee concurred. "When we did our town-wide open space survey two years ago, of the 500 respondents, 51 per cent had visited Wheelwright Park in the last year. I hate to think how they would feel if in the future they go, and their favorite trail is blocked off by a house."

The funds must be raised before Town Meeting which is November 18. Donations, which are fully tax-deductible, may be sent to the Cohasset Conservation Trust, P.O. Box 314, Cohasset.

Health programs offered

Parents, teachers, and school and health professionals are invited to attend "Making Connections, Making a Difference, Making It Work," a free community program presented by the South Shore School Partnership for Health, on Thursday, Oct. 3, from 7 to 9 p.m. at Notre Dame Academy, 1073 Main St., Hingham.

The evening's presenter will be Edward Hallowell, MD, director of The Hallowell Center for Cognitive and Emotional Health. Hallowell is a psychiatrist and author of several books; his newest, "The Childhood Roots of Adult Happiness," will be released this fall. He will lead a discussion focusing on the importance of connections between students and adults in the home and school settings, and identify practical strategies to build and sustain those connections.

For more information on the program, call Kim Noble, RN, at 781-794-7415.

Celebrating differences

Forum focuses on diversity

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Tolerance is a key buzzword among those who fight for diversity.

All people must have tolerance for others, be it for their cultures, race, or religious beliefs.

On Monday night, however, the Cohasset Diversity Committee presented a speaker who claims tolerance isn't enough.

Victor Kazanjian, the dean of religious and spiritual life at Wellesley College, spoke to 30 residents about the importance of going "Beyond Tolerance," when it comes to diversity issues.

At Wellesley, Kazanjian heads up an interfaith consortium, a group that stresses building relationships as a way to bridge the gaps in belief. That program has been a success, incorporating all of the faiths on campus with equal representation. The individuals educate each other about their faiths and use friendship as a building block for understanding.

It is a grass-roots approach, but it is one that Kazanjian believes is crucial to reaching new levels of cultural exposure. It is also an approach that Kazanjian feels is applicable in other situations.

"I think in every town and every city, there are opportunities for people to get to know each other across these lines," said Kazanjian. "It takes an intentional effort by the community to create places where people really are encouraged to get to know each other across lines of difference."

The major hindrance to developing relationships is the lack of access to people of different backgrounds.

"We live in very stratified ways, where we often associate with people who are more like us then not," said Kazanjian. "And to create places where the interaction is more intensive is a great way to do it."

Once the effort is made though, things happen quickly.

"We live in a small metropolitan area," said Kazanjian. "It doesn't take a long time to get ourselves in connection with others."

Kazanjian was impressed with the turnout, noting that he feels it only takes a small portion of a community to enact change.

"This is where it starts," said Kazanjian. "It starts grassroots, it starts with people talking about their own communities and introducing new concepts and struggling to see how they can implement them."

School Committee member Chartis Tebbetts attended the meeting and noted the power of small-town activism.

"If you have five or 10 percent of the people who are actively engaged, doing diversity work, that the community can be transformed," said Tebbetts. "I don't mean that Cohasset is a bad community at all, it's just that it's a transforming experience to go beyond tolerance and to really be interested in the diversity that is here."

The Diversity Committee believes that the groundwork has been laid in Cohasset, but that continuing programs are necessary to enhance the town's general awareness.

"I think that there are a large group of residents in Cohasset that are already beyond tolerance," said Beth Myers, who emceed the event. "Programs like this help to raise awareness and get people to take time out of their busy lives to think about diversity."

Susan Etkind pointed to the event as an example of how much there is to learn about others.

"I think that his point was not merely accepting that these other people are there, but really finding out about them," said Etkind, another member of the Diversity Committee. "I feel like I know a little bit about the religions in Cohasset and not so much about the religions on the video, but to really understand each other, we really need to learn about each other."

Callahan steps to plate for fields

nity input and possibly a contest.

William Allard, a fairly new resident to town, donated $25,000 to CYBSA and asked the baseball field be named "Allard Field" in honor of his father, a long-time supporter of Little League.

Finally, Shellanne and John Durkin, contributed $25,000 to the fields and asked the softball field be named "Freedom Field" in honor of their friend who died at the World Trade Center on Sept. 11.

"I feel very strongly that selling town institutions is not the way to go," said Callahan. "More importantly is it not only the way to go generally, if that decision is to made, it should be made by the town – the owners of the property – and not by private groups or the users of the property."

Town Manager Mark Haddad emphasized that the Little League has not backed down from its commitment, but that if the naming rights aren't allowed, it will take a little while longer to generate the funds. All agreed that the contractor must be paid by the town for services rendered and the issue of the Little League commitment would be dealt with afterwards. Mark DeGiacomo, president of the Cohasset Youth Baseball and Softball Association, could not be reached before press time.

When the proposal was first raised back in July, the board appeared to be unanimously opposed. Merle Brown and Chairman Michael Sullivan both expressed reservations.

Callahan felt the need to bring the issue to the forefront, after he heard rumors that there was going to be an agreement that would allow naming rights in some form.

"I just feel that some of my colleagues don't want to go to the town and explain this," said Callahan. "But I fell that the town will see what's going on here and say 'No, this isn't the way to do things.'"

The selectmen will take up the issue at their next meeting, Oct. 8.

Illustrator at Buttonwood

Harry Bliss will visit Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset on Fri. Oct. 4 from 3 –5 p.m.. Observant readers may recognize Harry Bliss as the illustrator whose work enlivens a number of magazines. He is a staff artist for the New Yorker and has had fourteen covers on the magazine since 1997.

William Steig's new book, "Which Would You Rather Be?" (Harper Collins) poses a question that is right up a kid's alley. What youngster hasn't pondered what it would be like to be a particular animal or to have a special power? The bold illustrations of Harry Bliss suit this text to a T and add immeasurably to its appeal. Bliss is also the illustrator of two other critically acclaimed books which will be available at this signing, "A Fine, Fine School", by Sharon Creech and "Countdown to Kindergarten" by Alison McGhee.

This event is part of the read Around New England Celebration. This event is free and open to the public. Please call Buttonwood at 781-383-2665 to order you signed copy if unable to attend.

Spirited season

October brings with it crisp mornings, early sunsets, a burst of color. And, of course, political season. Across the state and on the South Shore in particular, political issues are heating up as candidates for state offices gear up for election day, Tuesday, Nov. 5. It will be full-steam ahead for the next five weeks in those contested races.

At times it may seem just a bit overwhelming or overkill. But these next five weeks will provide voters with an opportunity to weigh in with our concerns and hear what candidates have to say and decide who will best represents our interests.

Here at the newspaper we are providing extensive coverage and additional space in the weeks ahead to provide you, our readers, with the most complete coverage on the issues and the candidates. Our plans include an in-depth look at the issues and challenges facing the South Shore as well as close-up portraits of the candidates. We'll also let the candidates speak directly to you, in their own words, about where they stand.

We'll do our best to provide a balanced political forum, with our candidates corner, question and answer formats and issue-oriented articles.

This year, as in the past, we are privileged to host political debates where the candidates address the issues, and where they have been occasionally known to spar with each other. On Wednesday, Oct. 16, Plymouth County District Attorney Tim Cruz will face off against Democratic challenger Tim White. The debate, at 7 p.m. at Hingham Town Hall Auditorium, will be moderated by the League of Women Voters and features a panel of our journalists along with ample time for questions from the audience.

State Sen. Robert Hedlund and his Democratic rival Ted LeClair will take the stage at our debate on Thursday, Oct. 24 — same place, same time, same format.

The goal throughout the hurried weeks ahead is to give all of us a chance to have a voice in this democratic process and make educated choices. We encourage readers to attend the debates as well as talk to us at any time this month about issues and concerns they believe relevant during the campaigns.

So here's to a spirited and informed election season.

Wait till next year

Last season year the Red Sox season ended in disgust. The players gave up long before the weather turned, with players and management pointing angry fingers at each other as their disappointed fans turned to football.

But this year, Sox fans got everything they asked for. A bungling owner and clueless general manager were replaced by a slick team from out of town. Carl Everett and other bad attitudes were sent packing, replaced by leaders and cheerleaders like Tony Clark and Carlos Baerga. This team scored straight A's in clubhouse chemistry.

The Sox sparkled on the field as well, judging by the fine print in the sports section. They had two 20-game winners - Pedro Martinez and Derek Lowe -both legitimate contenders for the Cy Young. Nomar Garciaparra and Manny Ramirez delivered the runs promised when Manny was signed two years ago, and Manny may yet capture the American League batting title.

The traditional slow-pokes even had speed. Johnny Damon is among the league leaders in runs, hits, infield hits, triples and stolen bases. Closer Ugueth Urbina will finish among the league leaders in saves.

This team had personality as well as talent. It escaped major injuries to key players. With people like Rickey Henderson, Lou Merloni and Baerga (the league's top pinch-hitter), waiting in the wings, the Sox had more bench strength than most teams in memory.

This team had it all - OK, it didn't have much of a bullpen, despite valiant efforts by management to shore it up - and what it had was enough to win more than 90 games. But not enough, alas, to win a spot in the playoffs.

The Sox were mathematically eliminated when they lost in Chicago Wednesday night. Every year, the Red Sox manage to find a new way to break their fans' hearts. This year it was by amassing all the talent and good vibes fans have asked for and still falling well short of the prize.

It shows that you can put together a fine team, manage them effectively and do everything right, and still sometimes a seeing-eye grounder will elude the infielder's glove with the go-ahead run on third. Urbina's down-and-in fastball will drift out over the plate and be deposited in the screen over the Green Monster. Nomar will sometimes strike out with runners in scoring position. An easy double-play will sometimes be flubbed. And sometimes other teams no more talented than yours will catch the right breaks and string together enough wins to take away your playoff berth. That's why they call it baseball.

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

Gender card comes into play in governor's race

By Craig Sandler
STATE HOUSE NEWS SERVICE

On the premiere of "The West Wing" Wednesday, the First Lady, a doctor, caused political problems for the Democrats by saying that without a medical license, she's "just" a wife and mother.

Discussing the fallout, one political advisor says: "It's a women's issue." To which C.J. the press secretary replies: "It's a DUMB women's issue."

Nobody knows whether Mitt Romney's recent attack on Acting Gov. Jane Swift will play out as a women's issue or a dumb women's issue. He said Shannon O'Brien was similar to Swift, meaning a long-time Beacon Hill player disinclined to pursue significant change.

But O'Brien counterattacked that Mr. White Male was engaging in gender stereotyping by drawing the comparison. "For him to make a comment trying to lump all women together is pretty insulting to women," O'Brien said.

If it's a dumb issue, women will perceive Romney as trying to lump all Beacon Hill insiders together, regardless of gender. Or they'll take offense at O'Brien's playing the gender card. But if it's got legs — if women share O'Brien's professed sense of insult at the comparison – Romney may have made the first significant mistake of the campaign.

No matter what, Romney's criticism of his own party's governor is a big gamble. Swift is unpopular, and his decision to push her out of the race obviously means he doesn't think too highly of her. And Swift is now the status quo, and Romney badly wants to be seen as the alternative. Nevertheless, his sudden lapse of graciousness towards Swift will only advance his cause if all voters feel their distaste for Swift outweighs their dislike of privileged men criticizing women who are supposed to be on the same side.

If there's a political truth Romney understands, it's that modern American voters make their decisions in large part on personality. His new ads are proof. He's really, really nice in the new ads, but does not say a whole lot about running the government. He's spending the money on that approach because it's been shown to work.

That's part of the reason attacking Swift seems so fraught with peril. He was concentrating on building a white-knight persona who would defend himself when old time pols like O'Brien attacked, but who was mostly about cleaning things up and making them better. Attacking the sitting Republican governor – whom Romney praised in March – does nothing to advance that image.

Romney came out of his first big test – Tuesday night's debate – in fine shape, having earned much better reviews than he received in his last statewide race in 1994, and having forced O'Brien to apologize for an unsubstantiated charge of patronage-dealing against the Republican.

But now, for the Bay State political world, the theme of this campaign's exciting new episode is: how much difficulty did he just cause himself?

• Swift chalks up Romney's comment, and O'Brien's rebuttal to politics: If Swift was upset by Romney's comments or O'Brien's reaction, she wasn't saying. She told reporters: "I have been in politics for over 12 years now and I recognize the current political climate and how that drives the strategies of both candidates. I wasn't surprised nor did I take it personally. "

• Poverty down and income up in one state out of 50 — ours: The Census numbers streamed in as an echo of a previous economic period in Massachusetts, the same way old TV shows are just now arriving at far-away solar systems. The Bay State was the only one in the nation where poverty dropped and income rose in 2000-01. Since then, with the technology and finance industries going through major declines, unemployment and the number of uninsured people in Massachusetts are on the rise, while unemployment is falling nationally. Key leaders are beginning to predict that it will take Massachusetts longer than the rest of the nation to work itself out of the recession.

• Third alternative candidate joins Governor's race: Barbara Johnson of Andover is focusing on "men's rights," the idea that the family court and legal structure of the state is biased in favor of mothers in disputes over child custody. Her philosophy is stated on her Web page:

"Americans should have a common purpose. Americans do not want bitter partisan debates. Americans do not want 'gender wars' and 'culture wars.' Americans want simple problems solved, without regard to special interests." She qualified for the ballot by collecting 10,000 signatures.

• Certificate of local completion approved, debated: The Board of Education asked for public comment on a proposed change to the rules governing education reform that would allow seniors who fail the MCAS test to participate in local graduation ceremonies, by accepting a certificate of completion, or achievement – they're not sure yet what to call it. But critics of the state's new diploma requirements said the certificate would still be more like a certificate of stigma under a system where access to a quality education is unequal.

• DOE'S approved history may misrepresent Muslims: Some academics also had unkind words for the state's new world history curriculum guidelines. According to professors from Harvard and Boston University, the frameworks purportedly include materials painting an overly hostile, militaristic picture of the Arab world.

• Landscaping, fishing, construction most dangerous: The Public Health Council released the latest data on occupational deaths, and just as "The Perfect Storm" brought home so forcefully a few years ago, fishing is one of the most dangerous jobs. Officials said the data will help them focus their efforts to protect workers and hopefully save lives.

• Got something you want to confess to DOR? Do it soon: The state announced the first full "tax amnesty" program since 1984 – designed to generate an extra $43 million in unpaid delinquent taxes. Under the program, announced by Swift last week, scofflaws who pay up will face no penalty charges, but will remain accountable for the interest on the unpaid levies. But they must send in their money by Nov. 30.

Anatomy of a politician

GUEST COLUMNIST

SUSAN BELL

Recently I heard Tom Birmingham, who was being interviewed by a reporter, say "it isn't about anatomy." This made me think that, yes; it really is about anatomy. Of course, not the female anatomy that Tom was referring to, but the male, instead. And if it isn't about anatomy now, it certainly has been in the past.

The first woman to run for elected in office in Massachusetts in the 1960's, Betty Taymor, recently wrote a book titled "Running Against the Wind", which is illustrative of the atmospheric conditions for women running for elected office in Massachusetts. Betty's unsuccessful bid for state representative from Newton took place at a time when there was still great faith in both government and public service. It was on the heels of President John F. Kennedy's call to service –

Election 2002

Bradley: changes needed on 40B

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

(As part of the Community Newspaper Company coverage of the Third Plymouth District race, the candidates participated in a Question and Answer session on the issues).

Name: Garrett Bradley — Incumbent
Age: 32
Hometown: Hingham
Marital Status: Married, wife Heather
Children: Two daughters
Party: Democrat

Q. Chapter 40B has riled up citizens all over the South Shore. How do you feel about the law as it is written, the needs it intends to address (i.e. the affordable housing shortage), and the best way to approach fixing it (or leaving it alone)?

A. It is clear that there must be major changes to Chapter 40B. After attending numerous meetings with residents in my district and working closely on this issue with my colleagues in the State Legislature, it is obvious to me that local communities must be given more control over these developments. While I agree with the goal of building more affordable housing, I do not believe that Chapter 40B is accomplishing this goal. That is why I voted against it in the House this year. Along with a number of my colleagues, I drew a line in the sand on Chapter 40B and called for major reforms in the way it is implemented in our communities as well as a moratorium on current proposals until such reforms are in place.

To accomplish the goal of building more affordable housing in our area, we must give communities the tools to do it. This can be done by allowing housing units built under "inclusionary zoning" (where a town can mandate a portion of any development be affordable) to count as part of the town's affordable housing stock. Also, we should allow communities to count accessory dwellings (also known as in-law apartments) as affordable as long as the occupant meets the affordable income definition. Communities should then develop a plan to get to the ten percent state goal in a reasonable amount of time. If communities are accomplishing this, they should be able to deny any 40B permits.

Q. There has been much public debate over the current climate on Beacon Hill. Do you think there is a problem in the way things run on Beacon Hill? How would you combat that problem if you believe one does exist?

A. Yes, I do believe that there is a problem with the way things are run on Beacon Hill. Since being elected in 2000, I have fought hard to make sure that that citizens of our district have a strong, independent voice fighting for our interests on Beacon Hill. I have stood up to the House leadership to fight for the voter approved Clean Election Law. I also voted against the $1 billion tax hike proposed by leadership which called for, among other things, freezing the income tax roll back. I have worked hard to make sure that the citizens of this district have a strong independent advocate in the State Legislature. I am also committed to reforms that will make the House of Representatives a more open, democratic legislative body. These reforms include giving committee chairs more authority over legislation, ending closed-door budget meetings and giving individual Representatives more say in the legislative process. The best way to reform Beacon Hill is to elect Representatives that will vote the wishes of their district regardless of party.

Q. Passing the MCAS is a requirement of graduation for the first time this year. Do you feel that the test is serving its intended purpose at this point in time?

A. No, I do not believe that passing the MCAS test should be a requirement for graduation. My position on this issue is that the MCAS test should be one part of an overall evaluation of students to help ensure accountability and high standards in our classrooms. I believe that a student's performance in the classroom should be more important than his or her performance on a single test. My concern is that teachers will be forced to gear their curriculum to "teach to the test" and that this may take away the ability of our teachers to develop new and creative ways to educate.

Q. The state and national economies are no longer what they were just a few years ago. What plan would you have, as a legislator, to maximize the state budget in harder fiscal times?

A. I did not support the House tax package which included, among other things, freezing the tax roll back. The residents of Massachusetts voted overwhelmingly for the tax cut, and just as I have supported the Clean Elections law for the same reason, I did not vote to override the will of the voters and their clear intentions on these issues. Instead, I supported a mix of budget cuts and targeted increases in revenue. With a $21.8 billion budget that has almost doubled within the last ten years, I believe we should start the budget process by looking for ways to eliminate waste wherever possible. Last year, I sponsored a plan that would have generated over $1 billion to help close the budget gap and protect our local schools, public safety, and town services without raising arbitrary taxes. This plan would have utilized the unused portion of this year's tobacco fund settlement, provided more local aid by reducing the payouts from the Lottery, implemented a tax amnesty program for the state to secure delinquent taxes, and explored placing video gaming machines at the state's four existing race tracks. These solutions would have closed the budget gap without breaking our promise to the voters to reduce the income tax. Many of these same proposals should be reviewed in the next legislative session as we begin to debate the budget.

Also, I have filed legislation to solve what I see as the biggest factor in the budget gap of last year and the potential gap of next year. During the 1990s, the legislature relied far too much on capital gains taxes. Last year we saw an approximate $800 million drop in capital gains revenue in one year. To address this, I have proposed that we spend only 1/3 of any capital gains, that we save 1/3 in our rainy day fund and we return 1/3 to the taxpayers. This will protect the hardworking taxpayers of the Commonwealth by ensuring that the budget is not based on uncertain revenue.

Q. What are the three biggest issues that you feel face the state in the next two years?

A. The three biggest issues we face are: (1) adequately funding our public schools and our school building construction projects in a recession, (2) providing affordable health care for all residents; and, (3) dealing with development and quality of life issues in our community. Since my election in 2000, I have worked hard on all three issues. I have fought for additional funds for our public schools, and filed legislation to ensure that the state keeps its promise on funding our school construction projects. I have also supported efforts to reduce the cost of prescription drugs for our senior citizens. Finally, I have worked hard to reform Chapter 40B, improve our transportation options on the South Shore and provide funds for local projects such as the Bernie King Pavilion in Hull and the infrastructure improvements at the Hingham Commuter Boat.

Palmer: Chapter 40B has flaws

By Brian J. Scully

Q. Chapter 40B has riled up citizens all over the South Shore. How do you feel about the law as it is written, the needs it intends to address (i.e. the affordable housing shortage), and the best way to approach fixing it (or leaving it alone)?

A. The law as written has two fundamental flaws: 1) it does not provide for true affordable housing in the it communities most directly affects; 2) by definition it subjugates the will and the interests of local communities to the desire of commercial developers. Chapter 40B was written to address the urban housing crisis of the 1960s, but never achieved its objective. It should be eliminated not amended, and replaced with an incentive for local communities to address the growing need for affordable homes, with the flexibility to prevent overtaxing of local services or infrastructure. Such an incentive should promote multi-use zoning, balancing density with open space preservation, and long term planning.

Q. There has been much public debate over the current climate on Beacon Hill. Do you think there is a problem in the way things run on Beacon Hill? How would you combat that problem if you believe one does exist?

A. There is a big problem on Beacon Hill. We are all suffering the consequences of this problem: higher taxes and more frivolous spending combined with cuts in services. The problem in a nutshell is a legislative body monopolized by members beholden to special interests and lobbyists, rather than the citizens they represent. The first thing I have already done is to refuse any money from special interest groups or lobbyists. My loyalties and motivation are not in question. As a result, I can do everything in my power as a State Representative to ensure a true democratic process in the legislature. Lastly, I would also support a rule that no new investment would be made without first proving positive cost/benefit. This would have overruled the millions spent on Convention Centers, at time when seniors in nursing homes are taxed an additional $3300 per year.

Q. Passing the MCAS is a requirement of graduation for the first time this year. Do you feel that the test is serving its intended purpose at this point in time?

A. The purpose of MCAS is that of a diagnostic tool, to establish a benchmark by which to measure student progress at specific intervals. Ideally this should allow educators to better focus personalized attention, however, it also presents the danger of over-standardizing education by "teaching to the test." It is too early to truly assess the success of this goal, however, having the test in place is certainly better than a lack of any comprehensive or objective measure of student success across districts. It is an honest attempt to solve the problem of diagnosing learning deficiencies with enough time to correct them. But it should not be viewed as a replacement for individualized attention. There are no standardized students.

Q. The state and national economies are no longer what they were just a few years ago. What plan would you have, as a legislator, to maximize the state budget in harder fiscal times?

A. The way to maximize the budget is to eliminate areas of spending which provide no measurable value other than jobs for state employees. There are over 1700 individual state agencies, many of them fraught with redundancy. The axe should fall on redundant agencies, not necessary services and aid to communities (which were both severely cut this past year). In addition, town services and agencies are often at odds with state counterparts. These include those involved with public safety, environmental management school administration, and often work more effectively when managed locally rather than at the state level. Instead of overburdening town budgets (property taxes), they should receive additional state funding, to be offset by reductions among state agencies and the overhead incurred in managing multiple agencies.

Q. What are the three biggest issues that you feel face the state in the next two years?

A. In order: waning job security and pending layoffs, the shifting burden to local communities for financing public projects, and the stranglehold on the legislature by special interest groups.

The individual problems face by citizens of this state all directly relate to one or more of these. From the need for quality education, to the threat of having to move away from the community you call home, to overriding of local interest by vehicles such as Chapter 40B.

Addressing these three problems are my priorities as a State Rep, as the only candidate with experience in both business and elected office, as well as the only candidate refusing to accept special interest money.

Bradley holds office hours

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D–Hingham, will be holding district office hours Thursday, Oct. 10, at the Hingham Sons of Italy Hall, upstairs, 88 Chief Justice Cushing Highway, from 5 p.m. to 6 p.m.

If you are unable to attend this scheduled office hours, but would like to meet with the Representative, call (617) 722-2120 to schedule an appointment at your convenience.

Palmer wins endorsement from Small Business leaders

Nathaniel Palmer, Republican candidate for state representative, wins a key endorsement from the National Federation of Independent Business (NFIB), the nation's largest small business advocacy group.

Representing 600,000 members nationwide and 11,000 members in Massachusetts, the NFIB picked Palmer's campaign to endorse for the local legislative race, based on his support for issues affecting small business.

"Small business and independent tradesmen are critical to our district and the local community," explains Palmer. "We need a strong local business community to support the commercial tax base to pay for schools, provide jobs for local residents, and deliver crucial services to our district."

Palmer adds, "Small business is the fastest growing sector of the local economy and the lifeblood of the local business community. Yet without an appreciation for what it takes to run a business, the current Legislature has often failed to address the needs of this important part our community."

Palmer has made the issues facing small businesses and independent tradesmen a top priority in his campaign. These include fixing Massachusetts' insurance regulations that force us to pay some of the highest rates in the nation, implementing tax incentives for the creation of local jobs, and streamlining state government's role in starting new businesses.

As Palmer explains, "When you talk about small business in our community, you are talking about working families, single parents, retirees, and often those just entering the workforce. All of these individuals are affected by the impact our state has on small business."

Although Palmer does not except PAC donations or special interest money, as a small business owner he is pleased to win this important endorsement, with many members represented in his district.

"As the challenger in this race, it is an honor to receive this vote of confidence from such an important and influential constituency," explains Palmer. "As a small business owner, I have a unique appreciation for what it takes to make payroll, pay taxes, and deal each day with the burden of business regulations that favor big business, and harm small businesses."

Leclair says Beacon Hill is 'out of focus'

Ted LeClair, candidate for State Senate in the Plymouth/Norfolk district, is looking to change the focus of Beacon Hill.

"I am running for the State Senate because I believe that we can do more if our elected officials once again focus on people rather than politics," stated LeClair. "I believe that Beacon Hill has lost its focus. My campaign is about working to fix what is broken and helping to make our state government once again serve the needs of our citizens.

"We have a glaring example of this problem in our own back yard," stated LeClair. "Heart disease is the number one cause of death on the South Shore. Licenses to perform heart surgery are granted through our legislature. South Shore Hospital has partnered with major Boston hospitals and is ready to open a cardiac surgery unit. Yet, we cannot get the license for South Shore Hospital because, each year, politics in the State Senate keeps it from happening. This is unacceptable and, when elected, I will do something about it.

"I know we can do more if our elected officials focus on people, not politics. As a product of our public schools on the South Shore, I understand the importance of providing our children with the highest quality educational system. I will focus on our public education system so that our children can have excellent and safe schools. I will not accept level funding of education as an acceptable political compromise."

"It is clear to me that state government has not gotten better over the past 10 years. We need to change the focus of Beacon Hill. To do this, our elected officials must take responsibility for their actions and be directly accountable to the voters."

Rep. Bradley hosts a pre-election pasta supper

State Representative Garrett Bradley will host a pre-election pasta supper on Saturday, Oct. 5, from 7 to 10 p.m. at Sons of Italy in Hingham. The Sons of Italy Hall is located on Route 3A at the comer of Kilby Street, just 1/4 mile from the Hingham Rotary.

The event will provide residents with the opportunity to speak with Bradley about important issues facing the district. Tickets are $25, $50 and $100 and are available at the door. For more information call 781-740-3127.

A few useful tips for fall birding enthusiasts

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

Fall migration is much more leisurely and drawn out than spring migration. Shorebirds begin migrating back from the Arctic in mid-July. Juvenile shorebirds come later in the summer. By mid-September, songbird migration is in full swing. Migrants continue passing through until mid-November. That is the good news.

The hard part is that many birds molt out of their bright distinctive breeding plumage into something more drab for the fall and winter months. Many young males look just like females. Roger Tory Peterson devoted two whole pages in his field guide to "confusing fall warblers". Sparrows, which are particularly numerous in October, are frequently referred to as "LBJs". These "Little Brown Jobs" are hard to see and tend to look alike as they disappear into tall grass and the middle of thick underbrush. Shorebirds all have varying combinations of gray, brown and white plumage.

First, find the bird

Often birds are heard before they are seen. Listen for bird song and call notes. There is much less bird song in the fall, but there is some. Look for movement. This is easier when the wind is not blowing too hard. Look for dark "blobs" or abnormal shapes in trees and bushes. These are very likely birds. A little practice will make it easy to notice things that don't look quite right. Still, you may occasionally mistake a white plastic bag for a Snowy Owl, or think that a transformer box is an interesting hawk, or be convinced that a dried seedpod is a small bird. Most birders eventually will make an embarrassing "positive" identification of a bird that turns out to be some inanimate object.

Next, check important characteristics

General size and shape, type of bill, and head pattern, are the best things to check out first. Bearing in mind that size at a distance can be misleading, try to compare the size to birds you know. Is it as small as a sparrow, or the size of a crow, or something much bigger? Is the bird long and slender, or chunky? Is the bill thin and pointed like a warbler's? Is it conical like a finch's? Is it hooked like a hawk's? Is it wide-gaped like a flycatcher? Is it dagger-like as with herons? Is it a color other than black? As you focus on the head, determine whether there are head stripes. Does it have a crest, or an eye ring? What is its face pattern? Is the throat the same color as the head? It is good to note as many different field marks as possible, so also check for tail spots, breast streaking or coloration, wing bars and leg color.

Often birds are heard before they are seen. Listen for bird song and call notes. There is much less bird song in the fall, but there is some. Look for movement.

Behavior and habitat give important clues

The way a bird behaves often gives a good clue to its identification. Eastern Phoebes bob their tails up and down. Nuthatches go headfirst down tree trunks. American Kestrels hover as they hunt. Cormorants perch on rocks with their wings spread out to dry. Habitat is also an important clue. Ponds, deep woods, fields, thickets and marshes all attract different types of birds. Edge habitat is the area where two different habitats converge. Edges are attractive for birding because of the greater diversity this convergence provides. It is also usually easier to see birds while standing at the edge rather than being surrounded by thick vegetation.

Warbler tips

Noticing that a warbler has wing bars is not much help, because about half the species have them and half do not. It is much better to concentrate on the face and head. According to Jack Connor in "The Complete Birder", "...most fall warblers of both sexes can be identified by head pattern alone." Warblers are similar to vireos, but vireos are a little less active than warblers and their bills have a slight hook on the end. Both are found in deciduous trees and low bushes or tangled undergrowth, especially if there is fresh water nearby. Learn which warblers tend to stay in the top canopy of trees and which prefer lower branches or the ground and low underbrush.

Sparrow Tips

Almost all sparrows have streaking on their backs. Some also have streaked breasts, some have a central breast spot, and some have unstreaked breasts. Here again the head and upper breast pattern are the most help. "Birds of North America" published by Golden Press has two pages showing sparrow heads. The length and shape of the tail is a good supplemental field mark. This can often be viewed even as the bird is flying away.

Some general tips

Keep looking at the bird for as long as the bird is there, noting as many characteristics as possible. Refrain from studying the field guide until after the bird flies away or you will lose your chance to observe details. Stop periodically when you are walking and just wait with eyes and ears alert. You will be surprised how often birds will fly in while you are standing quietly. On the other hand, if nothing seems to be happening, don't stay in one place forever. Flocks of chickadees often indicate that other small birds are nearby as well. If you see bird activity in a tree, focus your binoculars on the general area, then when you want to look at a specific bird, it will take less time to fine-tune the focus wheel. With warblers, every second counts!

Hawks and Shorebirds

Hawks migrate in large groups along certain flyways. For information about good hawk watching sites in Massachusetts, check out http://massbird.org/EMHW. Going to one of these sites provides a chance to see hundreds, or even thousands, of hawks flying by on a good day. Studying their wing shapes and flight patterns will give you more confidence when looking at single birds elsewhere. Shorebirds, that wide assortment of sandpipers and plovers, congregate on beaches and mud flats. They feed at low tide and roost at high tide. They are often too far away to identify easily with binoculars. If you can join a group trip with a leader who has a spotting scope, it will save some frustration and provide a good chance to learn.

Birding in a new place

If you plan to bird while traveling, study your field guide before you go. Try to get a list of possible birds for that area. Knowing what birds to look for gives you a good head start. Range maps are useful for determining whether your tentative identification is a real possibility in that location. For instance, if you are in California, any meadowlark will be a Western Meadowlark, but if you are in northern Texas, you could see either Eastern or Western Meadowlarks and need to learn their songs to tell them apart.

Practice in the field is what will give you experience and ability, so get outside to bird as often as possible. Watch for northwest winds that bring migrants back from their breeding grounds. Details are important, so check as many field marks as possible. Study common birds that you already recognize, noticing individual variations. These will become so familiar that more unusual species will immediately stand out as being different.

Joanne Norton is Master Bander for the New England Wildlife Center, and counts birds for FeederWatch, WetlandWatchers and International Shorebird Surveys.

Anatomy of a politician

"Ask not what your country can do for you, but what you can do for your country." This challenge to give back to our country was to leave a lasting impression on the lives and careers of many children.

As the title of Betty's book indicates the road to success is laden with many challenges. That is, no women had been elected to statewide office in Massachusetts on a single ticket until Shannon O'Brien won her bid as State Treasurer three years ago. In the book, she cites the many obstacles that women have faced. The one obstacle that stood out was women themselves. Women most of all weren't supporting women candidates who ran, that anatomy business again.

In my professional experiences, I have often found male peers to be more supportive of their female peers than women, themselves. The reasons for this go beyond the basic attraction factor between the sexes. This trend is in stark contrast to the generations of men in Massachusetts who have been supported by both women and men.

The children that were inspired by President Kennedy's words have now come of age and are trying to self-actualize them. Our state and our country need strong leadership now more than ever given these very uncertain times. We need a Governor who can build coalitions and work with the Legislature. We cannot let anatomy cloud our understanding of who the best leader is for Massachusetts, and we need to remember that the children, boys and girls, are watching.

Campaign revving up reason is the one-party system. It is the rank and file members who have ceded their authority to the leadership. There are very few people like myself who will vote for their districts' best interests rather than follow the leadership. What I am focusing on is my independence and my effectiveness for the district. I have stood by my district rather than follow the leadership."

LeClair said that Beacon Hill "is out of focus" because the legislature is focusing on politics, not people.

"I am running for the state senate because I believe that we can do more if our elected officials once again focus on people rather that politics. I believe Beacon Hill has lost its focus. My campaign is about fixing what is broken and helping to make our state government once again serve the needs of our citizens," said LeClair, whose campaign manager is former 10-year state Rep. Paul Haley, a prominent Weymouth Democrat.

LeClair cited the so-far-unsuccessful attempt of South Shore Hospital to receive a state license to perform cardiac surgery as a "glaring example" of the legislature's lack of focus on the right priorities. South Shore Hospital has partnered with a major Boston Hospital and is ready to open a cardiac surgery unit, LeClair noted.

"Heart disease is the number one cause of death on the South Shore. Licenses to perform heart surgery have been granted through our state legislature. For the fourth year in a row, the House has passed a bill allowing cardiac surgery, yet the Senate has not. We cannot get the license for South Shore Hospital because, each year, politics in the state Senate has kept this from happening," LeClair said.

Hedlund has long advocated for South Shore Hospital and said that the problem lies with the influence in the Senate exerted by the state Dept. of Public Health, the agency with the authority to grant licenses for cardiac surgery.

"The Dept. of Public Health sees it as a legislative intrusion on their statutory role," Hedlund said. "Paul Haley was chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee during this time, and for two consecutive years, he couldn't get the bill through the joint conference committee."

On the issue of education, Hedlund says funding should be a priority.

"We want to see that education funding is prioritized and to protect the School Building Assistance program. This is especially important in this district," Hedlund said.

Weymouth has a $58 million high school building project underway and Duxbury, Cohasset, and Norwell each have two projects on the SBA list, as does Scituate, where town officials are concerned about reimbursement for one of those projects.

"These communities are on the list. The question is when reimbursement will occur," Hedlund said.

State Sen.

Ted LeClair

Towns can only do short-term borrowing to cover their school building projects for five years. After that, the town has to pick up the tab until reimbursement comes in. One community faces a potential $800 yearly tax hike for the average-priced home if reimbursement falters. How quickly towns receive reimbursement depends on how much money the towns put into the program each year

"I have fought to ensure that adequate funding is included in the state budget so that local school projects can move forward," Hedlund said.

LeClair said this was another sign of the focus problem.

"I know we can do more if our elected officials focus on people, not politics. As a product of our public schools on the South Shore, I understand the importance of providing our children with the highest quality educational system," said LeClair, a Scituate native now living in Marshfield. "I will focus on our public education system so that our children can have excellent and safe schools. I will not accept level funding of education as an acceptable political compromise."

Another issue is Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law that allows developers to bypass local board rejections and apply for approval from the state, as long as 25 percent of their units meet the definition of affordable housing.

Hedlund feels that the Omnibus Housing Bill pushed by Democrats keeps the status quo.

"The South Shore delegation is united in opposition," Hedlund said. "The current law has been in place 33 years, and Massachusetts has the worst record on affordable housing in the nation. This shows the law has not worked."

Hedlund has filed a bill in the Senate seeking to return a significant amount of control to local cities and towns, so that developers will be less able to circumvent local boards. LeClair agrees local towns should have more control.

"Otherwise, we might as well throw our conservation commissions and zoning boards out the window," LeClair said.

Hedlund adamantly opposes the $1.3 billion state tax hike.

"I am unconvinced that the leadership has made any strides to go after waste. There has been no reform, no cost savings on projects we could have saved money on, just a knee-jerk reaction to raise taxes," Hedlund said.

Hedlund said one potentially cost-saving area that should be investigated is the duplication of state agencies.

On the local level, state cuts caused Weymouth Mayor David Madden to reorganize town government from the bottom up, combining some departments and eliminating other departments and personnel.

"There are duplicative agencies and duplicative staffing. What Weymouth was forced to do, the state didn't even look at," Hedlund said.

One example of overlapping state agencies is in Weymouth, where the MDC and the Dept. of Environmental Management split up running the town's state parks, Hedlund said.

LeClair said that next year, Beacon Hill should focus on waste.

"This year, if it had not been for the Rainy Day Fund, we would have had a very serious problem" LeClair said.

Both contenders are looking forward to the Oct. 24 debate at Hingham Town Hall to be sponsored by Community Newspaper Company and the League of Women Voters.

project is to repair the seawall that the sidewalk and fence are constructed on. The CRC has identified a grant that would pay for half of that aspect of the project, provided the town provides matching funds (It is important to note that the town has not signed on to the project, or committed any funds at this point).

When the project was first introduced, there were three levels of construction. It appears that the CRC is asking the selectmen to recognize the need for improvement, which would seem to point toward the third, and larger option.

The first option is a "no improvements" approach, which will undertake no changes to the waterfront area save new asphalt patching to fill reoccurring potholes. Existing walkway and infrastructure conditions would remain the same.

The second option is a "minimum improvements" approach, which consists of primarily replacing the existing asphalt sidewalk with a new scored concrete or asphalt surface material. A rollover curbing system could be installed but no lighting, railing, sidewalk width or road width changes are incorporated in this approach.

The third option is to make "moderate improvements," which would reconstruct and widen the existing sidewalks along with an application of scored concrete. There would also be an installation of vertical granite curbing, new lighting as appropriate, tree planting, a new wood or steel railing system and minor repairs of the seawalls as needed.

The Board of Selectmen requested that anyone wishing to comment on the situation is to do so in writing by Friday. All letters should be directed to the Board of Selectmen at the Town Hall.

"There are a couple of things there that I could envision," said Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan of the different fence types that Rizzo displayed. "There were a couple that we didn't have to spend any time on. It's trying to figure out, 'Do you want to make those types of improvements and does the Town as whole want to make them?'"

Sullivan noted that involving the abutters to be involved in the process is important to its success.

"If we could get the neighbors there to be comfortable with a change and it works out for the town then then it could work out well," said Sullivan.

Sullivan is also comfortable with private companies bringing forward non-binding proposals to the town, especially given the state of the economy.

"Free planning is free planning," said Sullivan. "If we get the benefits of some private party going out and spending money to look at options that the town might implement without any obligation on the part of the town, and we get to say no, to me it is like, 'Thank you very much."

LISTEN To Life

by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

WELL-DISPOSED

Newly available to the public are disposable hearing instruments, which offer conventional analog sound quality with possible cost savings. They are designed for people with moderate hearing loss and fit about 80% of adult male ears and 60% of adult female ears. These disposable hearing devices come in a variety of prescriptions that the hearing instrument specialist can select in accordance with the patient's hearing loss. The disposable device lasts for 30 to 40 days, after which the encapsulated battery expires. At this point, the user simply disposes of the expired device and purchases a replacement. These new disposable hearing instruments usually cost an average of about a dollar a day to use.

Keeping pace with the fast-growing technology of today's hearing industry is an important part of our business at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER. Our experienced staff uses sophisticated, specialized equipment to pinpoint and evaluate your hearing impairment. We then match the most appropriate hearing instrument with your individual needs. Our services don't stop there, however. We know follow-up and support are key to the successful wearing of your hearing aid. Call us at 781-878-9723, or better yet, stop by 80 North Avenue, Rt. 139, North Medical Building, Abington, and find out about the many hearing instruments on the market today to help the hearing impaired.

P.S. One advantage to a disposable hearing device is that it is immediately available.

CHS lady booters wins third straight

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

With three straight wins, the girls soccer team has climbed up to the .500 level, and now looks to make a run at a state tourney berth.

"Morale is definitely different," effused fifth year coach Deb Beal, who has not yet made post-season play with this team. "It's exciting because we're winning. You can do 100 good things in a game, but you forget them all if you lose."

The team started off the season 1-4, but the Lady Skippers were in every game. Norwell downed them, 1-0, scoring the goal late in the second half of a game in which Cohasset was arguably the superior team. Cohasset also nearly came away with a huge road win in Mashpee, but lost 3-2.

Yet, they have turned things around in the past week. Last Monday, the Lady Skippers won in Hull for the first time in the team's existence, outplaying the Lady Pirates to a 2-0 win.

"It's always scary going to Hull," started the coach. "It's windy, it's sandy; you don't know what to expect."

Cohasset beat their neighbors 2-0 last year at Alumni Field before getting throttled 6-0 at the Gut. This year, the Lady Skippers came in riding high on a two game win streak, and senior captain Molly Flanagan kept the momentum rolling scoring just six minutes in.

The goal, Flanagan's third of the year, came on a cross from junior Gillian Weber. She is now second on the team in scoring behind Jen Buckley (five goals, four assists). Buckley and Molly have combined to score more than half of their team's 15 goals this year.

Scoring in the opening minutes has been a key to much of the Lady Skippers recent success. Cohasset scored on Holbrook just three minutes in, en route to a 5-1 victory at home. The same wave of momentum that carried Cohasset over Holbrook carried the Lady Skippers again in Hull.

"I always preach first five minutes and last five minutes of the half," noted Beal. "It sets the tone and gets everyone on the same page."

Beal went on to say that scoring the early goal gave her defense confidence to shut down the Hull attack. Beal had particular compliments for the play on the backline of senior

Consistency remains elusive mark for unbeaten boys soccer team

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Eight games into the season, Dave Nigro is still left scratching his head at times over his Cohasset boys soccer team.

There have been a few times now this fall where the third year head coach swears he almost didn't recognize his team from the way it was playing on the field. Last Thursday down in Harwich was definitely one of those occasions where he was both scratching and shaking his head, as he watched his Skippers fritter away a two-goal lead late in the second half as a result of some sloppy defensive play and have to settle for a 3-3 tie with the host Rough Ryders.

On the upside, the tie kept the Cohasset boys unbeaten at 4-0-4. On the downside:

"We were just disorganized on defense and we had some guys who just had bad games," stated Nigro. "I don't know exactly what caused it, but we just had a lot of trouble getting the ball out of our end, and a couple of times it came back to bite us."

Captain Evan Pestone scored two first half goals and junior Dave Santiago added another 10 minutes into the second half to make it a 3-1 game – a lead Nigro admitted he felt "pretty good about" at the time. Then came the collapse…and the head scratching.

"I was pleased with the way we played up front, and our midfield play was pretty good," continued Nigro. "And I can't blame (goalie) Curt Kahn for any of the goals. He played well. It was just the guys playing in front of him let down."

The Skippers bounced back for a 6-0 win on the road over Hull on Monday, with Pestone (three goals) and Santiago (two goals) continuing their torrid pace of late. Midfielder

"Offense, defense and special teams all came together just like you hope they will. This was just a complete team win."
Cohasset football coach Tont Rolfe

"Everything that could go right did go right."

This is the way Cohasset High football coach Tony Rolfe summed up his Div.5 team's 34-0 shocker over Div. 1 North Quincy at Alumni Field Saturday night.

"Offense, defense and special teams all came together just like you hope they will," continued the fifth year head coach whose Skippers improved to 3-0 with the win. "This was just a complete team win."

It took all of four plays for Rolfe and company to figure this might be a pretty special night. Coverage on the opening kickoff pinned the visiting Red Raiders inside their 25-yard line, and three straight stuffs brought out the punting unit. Cohasset's Chris McKenna broke untouched through the line on the snap, and blocked the attempted boot to bring Cohasset's offense on to the field for the first time at NQ's 16-yard line.

Three plays later, halfback Braun Goodson smashed his way in to the end zone from 7-yards out for his first of four touchdown runs on the night. The 6-foot-2, 210 lead runner also finished with 106 yards on just 12 carries before taking a seat for good in the third quarter.

The Skippers got the ball back moments after their opening score when Matt Davis picked off an errant long throw from NQ quarterback Jim Burke and returned it back across midfield.

It was three more offensive plays and six more points, as Goodson bulled his way through the line and went the distance from 27-yards out.

A conventional Cohasset drive early in the second quarter ended the same way as the two

To split or not to split?

That is the question P.C. officials must address soon

EXTRA POINTS

MIKE SPELLMAN

The guess here, for whatever it's worth, is there will ultimately be a compromise that keeps the Pilgrim Conference together.

In case you missed the story first reported in last week's Mariners, all seven schools of the Atlantic Coast League and three from the Old Colony League have recently informed the MIAA of their intent to break away from the Pilgrim Conference after the 2003-'04 school year. The secession card was played by principals from these 10 schools after officials from the Pilgrim Conference's other 23 schools did not respond favorably to proposals they made at a realignment meeting in mid-June.

Citing concerns over growing travel expenses and the dissolving of natural rivalries, these 10 schools — Nauset, Sandwich, Dennis-Yarmouth, Falmouth, Plymouth South, Plymouth North, Whitman-Hanson,

Field hockey team falls to 2-5

By David Ingber

The Cohasset field hockey team long ago declared that 2002 would be the season where the team returned to its position of power atop the South Shore League. But with two losses in the past week, things need to turn around quicklyfor the Lady Skippers if they are to make a post-season run.

"We still have a shot," noted

Jesse Brewer also added a solo tally.

However, even that did not get Nigro all that excited, as the Pirates are struggling this year, and the game was played on Hull's fast, small field, which tends to contribute to lopsided wins.

"We scored a lot, and that was nice to see, but it's tough to get a read on how we played overall," noted the coach. "I hope it gave us a spark. We'll probably find out Wednesday (yesterday). If we play then like we did at the end against Harwich, we could be in trouble."

Indeed. Norwell was slated to come to town yesterday, and everyone knew the pre-season anointed favorite Clippers would be loaded for bear with memories still fresh from their 2-1 loss to Cohasset in the season opener back on Sept. 10.

Boys soccer notes

Nigro said he continues to be "pleasantly surprised" by the work of Curt Kahn in goal. The senior has been a regular in the midfield rotation each of the previous two seasons, but offered to make the move to goal late this fall when the incumbent expressed a desire to play elsewhere on the field.

"Curt is really doing a fine job, especially considering the lack of experience he has (in net)," said Nigro. "He's made the plays he's needed to and come up with some big plays too."

Among the other players Nigro made a point to laud for recent play were, not surprisingly, his one-two scoring punch partners, Santiago and Pestone, and junior defensive midfielders John Andrade and Conor Buick.

The junior class — with starters Santiago, Andrade, Buick, Brewer, Chris Clark and J.T. Oronte – definitely appears to be the strength of this year's team.

To split or not to split?

Randolph North Quincy and North Quincy — petitioned to form a new 10 team Atlantic Coast League with North and South subdivisions. When that request was not addressed in a manner this faction deemed suitable, officials from these schools went ahead and made the move toward doing precisely what they'd requested independently.

So why doesn't this typist think it's going to happen?

Simply put, both sides have something the other side wants: numbers. There is power in numbers, and the folks on both sides of the fence would have to be inordinately vindictive or dopey not to exhaust every possible means of reaching a compromise that would make it possible to retain some semblance of what is currently in place.

Going from a 33 school body to two separate bodies of 10 and 23 would prove detrimental on numerous fronts, not the least of which would be the loss of influence and clout at the state level.

Hitting closer to home, long standing partnerships would be wiped out in the blink of an eye and games would become much more difficult to arrange. It sounds good in theory for an Athletic Directors to say more games could be set up with "neighboring schools," but a lot of those neighboring schools have their own scheduling obligations within their own Conferences. For many A.D.'s filling out bigger non-league schedules would, in fact, become a nightmare.

And what about growth and recession. What happens if say student enrollment at Nauset High, already the smallest in terms of student population in this 10-school faction, continues its steady decline? The various Warriors teams wouldn't stand much of a chance pitted by league affiliation against schools with 400-500 more students from which to select. And what would be that school's options if this happened beyond simply taking its lumps?

Or what if a grass roots parents group in Whitman or Hanson suddenly starts a push to de-regionalize, as Pembroke is in the process of doing from the Silver Lake district.

It's a simple fact of life: things change. Another simple fact of life is that dividing numbers also divides options and the ability to adapt to these changes.

It might be easy and convenient for these schools to walk away from their conference right now. We're guessing that if things change, however, it won't be quite so easy for any of them to get back in to a conference, the Pilgrim or another, particularly given the acrimony behind this proposed split.

What this boils down to for the 23 schools that would remain in the Pilgrim Conference is not wanting to set a dangerous precedent. With very few exceptions, alignment within the Pilgrim Conferences four primary leagues – the Old Colony, Atlantic Coast, Patriot and South Shore Leagues — have been based exclusively on student enrollment numbers. If they allow these 10 schools to establish a whole bunch of new exceptions, there is real concern for what will come their way next.

What this boils down to for the 10 renegade schools is either not wanting to give up what they've got or, particularly in the case with the three OCL schools (Falmouth, Plymouth South and North Quincy), wanting something better.

If the majority of the 23 schools remain unwavering, would the 10 actually follow through with the course to which they've tentatively committed? Yeah, more than likely.

The Cape schools are tired of being jockeyed about.

Reportedly, Randolph and the two Quincy schools have been eyeing a break from the Pilgrim Conference for a few years now. Fed up with spiraling out of control travel budgets, these three schools were reportedly quite close to jumping ship to the Greater Boston League prior to the Pilgrim Conference's last realignment in 2001.

Then you've got Plymouth South, whose athletic teams haven't won much of anything since opening its doors and being placed immediately in the OCL. That school's student population keeps it in the Pilgrim Conference's "big league," but the reality is the athletic participation at that school is more on a par with the smaller schools. Plymouth South is home to the town's Technical Education Program, so it draws "Tech" students from both the north and south districts — students who, generally speaking, are not active in athletics.

There are valid concerns and issues on both sides of the table here, but you've got to believe reason will eventually win out.

The next meeting of all Pilgrim Conference schools has been scheduled for Nov. 5. Hopefully, folks on both sides will have cooled down enough by that point to let logic prevail.

Parting shots

So, who out there still believes having a "true leadoff hitter" is overrated? If you do, try rationalizing this:

When the Red Sox record reached a season best record of 40-17 on June 6, Johnny Damon was making a strong run at MVP consideration with a .348 batting average, 51 runs and 15 steals. For the final 105 games, over which the Sox went 53-52, Damon batted .251 with 67 runs and 16 steals.

Sure, I'm concerned about the Patriots sudden inability to stop the run. However, unlike a few acquaintances and associates, I'm nowhere near ready to begin openly questioning whether or not the defending Super Bowl champs have what it takes to make it back to the playoffs.

Puh-leaze! It's the first loss since mid-November, folks. This is still a very, very good team.

Most football games between two good teams come down to two or thee big plays, and luck (as much as we sometimes hate to admit) is often a factor.

Forget what happened in weeks one and two. Luck was immaterial there. The Steelers and Jets, as we now know, are not good football teams – much unlike the Charges who, with that defense, are eminently legit.

The Patriots had Lady Luck in their corner in playoff wins over the Raiders, Steelers and Rams this past winter. This past Sunday, the fickle Lady switched allegiances to the Chargers. That's all.

Most weeks, the Pats won't have to worry about luck.

SPORTS NOTES

Change in CHS admission prices

There has been a change in the game admission prices for South Shore League games this season. Admission for adults will be $4 and students and seniors will be admitted for $3.

Discount tickets

Student Pass: Students can purchase a year-long athletic event pass. The passes are only good for on-campus home events. The cost is $25.

Adult Pass: Parents and fans can purchase 10 event tickets. The passes are only good for on-campus, home events. The cost is $25.

The discounts tickets may be purchased from Mr. Ford's in the Athletic Director's office or from Mr. Leary at the gate on game days.

Changes to Alumni Field

Due to the ongoing construction project there will be some changes to Alumni Field.

Parking: Please park in the main parking lot in front of the school. Additional parking will be available along the entrance driveway by the main office and at Milliken Field, handicap parking will be available in the main parking lot on the right as you enter the lot.

Please do not park on Bancroft Extension (the road which leads to the visitors side gate) and along the driveway that leads from the lower lot to the main entrance of the school.

Entrance: There will be two entrances available. One entrance will be on the visitor's sideline behind the visitor's sideline. There will also be a temporary access entrance this will allow spectators to enter Alumni Field from the main parking onto the track.

Restrooms: There will be two portable restrooms on the visitors sideline adjacent to the bleachers. Indoor restrooms will also be open in the front entrance of the High School.

Concessions: A temporary concession stand will be set up on Alumni Field in the scoreboard end of the field for night games and home football games.

MAXLAX REPORT

Game of the Week: U12 Cohasset v Hingham

Well, it seems that overtime contests are becoming the routine rather than the exception as another outstanding weekend of indoor play was capped off with a MaxLax thriller between the kids from these two perennial lacrosse powerhouses. Only this time it was the younger kids turn as these 5th and 6th graders showed that they also had an "A" game and it was definitely on display in this hard fought adventure.

Cohasset opened up the action with a nice give and go tally by Kevin Ciardi from Andrew Smith. This early lead would quickly disappear as Hingham's John Fitzgerald went on a tear, netting two himself and assisting Tom Kelly on another with a "college level" no look pass on a rush down the center of the field. Not to be outdone, Smith rallied his squad with some outstanding defense in his own end that produced a fast break goal on an assist from Connor Queenan and then followed it up with a nifty upper corner strike from the right side. With the score tied at 3 – 3 and time running down in the first half, both goalies stood tall in the net rejecting several last minute shots until Kelly and Fitzgerald teamed up again to close out the half with Hingham ahead by one.

Hingham's Ricky Boyle got into the action quickly in the second half as he notched a solo shot after dodging several Cohasset defenders and then assisted on another Fitzgerald score that gave Hingham what seemed like a commanding 3 goal lead. In a game that featured a number of multiple goal scorers, the trend continued as Cohasset battled back with two quick tallies by Chris Brown with assists from Jackson Dean and Conor Murphy – who took a BIG hit, but still delivered the ball where it is was needed. With two minutes left in the game, Cohasset tied the score on a fast break goal by John Kearney on a cross-court feed from Smith (who would finish the day with 4 points). Hingham's tag team tandem of Fitzgerald and Kelly struck once again (for their 6th and 3rd points of the day) to put Hingham up by one going into the waning moments, but Matt Wasel of Cohasset tied it up in the last ticks of the clock on an end to end rush finding the back of the net as regulation ended.

During the 2 OT periods that followed, the goalkeepers and defense controlled the pace of the play as both teams battled toe to toe in this sudden death format. With Hingham getting off 7 shots to Cohasset's 5, this was as evenly matched a group as we've seen and when the last buzzer went off, the players, coaches, and the fans had a great one for the memory books where everyone came out a winner.

Player of the Week: John Fitzgerald, Hingham (4 Goals, 2 Assists)

MaxLax is now accepting registrations for the Winter session that begins play November 4th. Space will be limited and registrations for teams and individuals will be on a first come first served basis. For more information, please contact us at maxlax@msn.com or 781/383-0413.

veteran coach Deb Bostwick, whose team fell short of a state tourney berth last season after qualifying in 2000 with a historic 15-win season and run to the Sectional semi-finals. "We just haven't found a nucleus for our team yet."

Last Thursday, the Lady Skippers traveled to Duxbury, where the Div. 1 Lady Dragons shut out their visitors 4-0. With 16 seniors and two juniors to their varsity roster, Duxbury is clearly one of the teams to beat in the state.

However, Bostwick seemed more than encouraged by her team's performance. Her troops allowed one goal eight minutes in, but held the Lady Dragons scoreless until halftime. Cohasset did a terrific job of thwarting the Duxbury attack for the most part, limiting their hosts to just three corners.

"That was one of the best team games we have played," started the coach. "We made them earn every shot that they took and every goal that they made. We can compete with them, and we did scare them."

Bostwick had particular accolades for senior Sarah Dennis and junior Danielle Pinkus for their strong drives that helped keep the Duxbury forwards out near midfield. On defense, Bostwick noted the performances of juniors Rachel Doyle and Frannie Noble as "wonderful." This duo helped keep a ferocious Dragon attack at bay until the end of the game.

Cohasset did amass 13 shots on net, a creditable total for any game, especially against a top opponent.

"I am very impressed with everyone," Bostwick lauded. "Four-nothing is a very respectable score."

On Monday, Cohasset suffered a league loss to Carver, 2-0. The key for Carver was winning the ball control game, as they utilized their team speed to reach loose balls and stay the aggressive team.

"Carver outplayed us, they out-stepped us, and they beat us to the ball," reported Bostwick, whose team now stands at 2-5 with 11 games remaining. "Our major hang-up was in the center of the field. We had no control."

On Carver's slow, thick field, it became very difficult for Cohasset defenders to pass the ball up to their forwards. The quick Carver midfielders took advantage and kept the ball in the Lady Skippers' end for the vast majority of the game, as reflected by their 22 corner attempts.

"When we did get the ball to our forwards, we were good," noted the coach. "But they had speed, and they played a little smarter. We played a very defensive ballgame."

abbreviated pushes. Goodson plunged in from 1-yard out. QB Mike Snowdale then hit John Durkin with a pass for the two-point conversion and a 20-0 Skippers lead wit h nine minutes still to go before the halftime break..

The rout was on but good shortly before the break when Cohasset's Cosimo Cambi took away a quick "out" pass as it was being bobbled by a North Quincy receiver and raced 33-yards for the score. The Tom Anderson kick made it 27-0.

The Skippers opened the second half with their most impressive push of the night, with the offensive line of Cambi, Dan Tarpey, Nick Armond, Mike Casey and Steven Davis simply blowing Red Raiders off the line to open huge holes for Goodson.

"Our offensive line and inside running game has really emerged as a strength for us in these first four games," said Rolfe. "The line is getting better and better as they get used to one another. We've got some pretty good weapons in (returning league all-star quarterback) Mike Snowdale and our receiving corps too, but we haven't had to use them a lot yet."

Goodson polished off this opening drive of the second half wit h a 12-yard scoring burst up the gut, earning himself and most of his fellow first teamers the rest of the night off.

Football notes

Ironically, this is a game many urged Rolfe to steer away from for fear of shaking the confidence of a few of his younger and less experienced players so early in the season.

Clearly, Rolfe expected a much more spirited encounter with the Div. 1 team, as he initially defended his decision to play the game by stating: "The way it looks like the powers in the South Shore League are lining up, these are the kinds of games you've got to play to get ready."

Rolfe and staff have made a point of practicing punt and kickoff coverage more than most teams the last few years, and the extra work continues to pay off, as the Skippers have consistently forced opponents in the first three games to start drives from the wrong side of their 30-yard line.

This game was originally slated to be played under the lights at Alumni Field on Friday night, but wet conditions and the threat of more rain prompted Cohasset Athletic Director Ron Ford to push the game back 24 hours.

The annual Homecoming festivities are planned for this weekend, with Cardinal Spellman's football team coming to town this Saturday for a 1:30 kickoff. The following Friday night, the Skippers begin their quest to repeat as South Shore League champs as they travel to Carver.

Fall sports injuries, early intervention

Back to school — Back to sports — Back to fall sports injuries. With the return to school and sports, typically comes the return of injuries to many of the participants in the fall sports programs. For mom and dad, it means that the "nicks" and "dings" that occurred at age 12 and 13 mean real injuries at ages 14, 15 and 16. The skeletons have changed. So have the responses to stress and strain. According to Peter Stone co-owner and physical therapist at Prescription Orthopedic Sports Therapy in Cohasset, the most important part in the process is early recognition and early intervention to the injury process.

For the athletes that condition themselves beginning in June and July, the injuries will tend to be less sustaining. For the athletes that took the summer off, they may find themselves taking the fall off as well. So what do you do when your child comes home and says that he or she was hurt at school playing a sport? Most importantly — get some answers — a diagnosis. Get some early treatment at home, RICE (rest, ice, compression, elevation). Get some early intervention with exercises, isometric exercises (decrease motion at site of injury), continue to recondition the other joints (upper extremity for lower extremity injuries, or lower extremity for upper extremity injuries) and minimize the loss of skill (balance, shooting, passing etc.).

The early intervention mode ensures the highest likelihood of minimizing the time lost from injury. Consult with your pediatrician immediately. He or she will rule out pathology (fractures). Most sports injuries are defined as soft tissue (non-bony structures) such as muscles, tendons, ligaments, fascia etc. Once you know what it is not, find out what it is and how to treat it. Well-trained physical therapists and athletic trainers are skilled at differentiating muscles and tendons from ligaments and fascia. More importantly, early treatment with modalities (massage, electrical stimulation, icing) in conjunction with exercise techniques (stretching), mobilization technique and strength techniques minimize the loss of function. Al Blaisdell, co-owner of Prescription Orthopedic Sports Therapy in Cohasset and athletic trainer for Hingham High School, states the philosophy we have is to provide a continuum of care from acute onset of the injury, to guided rehabilitative techniques designed specifically for each injury, followed by a complete evaluation including functional tests and functional criteria that will assure a safe return to sports.

captain Julie Lordan and juniors Brenna O'Donnell and Holly Graham for their play on Monday.

The midfield also played a crucial part in Cohasset's advantage in the territorial game against Hull. Buckley and senior Maura McKenney consistently fed through balls to the forward line, passes that kept the Hull fullbacks retreating for most of the game.

Cohasset has 10 games remaining on the schedule, and needs to win half of these to qualify for the post-season. Fortunately, eight of the final 10 will be played in Cohasset.

Cohasset and Norwell played yesterday, while the Lady Skippers play their Homecoming match on Friday night at 7 pm in a re-match versus Mashpee.

The Lady Skippers are now fourth in the South Shore League, but they have four of their next five games against SSL opponents, and the league this year is very even. Abington sits atop the league with a 4-0 league record, but second through sixth are separated by three games.

Pet Memorials

Pets are more than friends. They're family.

The loss of a pet, whether sudden or after an illness, can leave you feeling empty. A Pet Memorial can help you bid a fond farewell to your companion, share your feelings with the community and fellow animal lovers and help ease your grief.

OBITUARIES

Mary Reardon

A tribute to Mary Reardon

Mary Groden Reardon, of Cohasset, died at the Colonial Rehabilitation & Nursing Center in Weymouth MA, on Wednesday, September 25, 2002, at the age of 90, after a brief illness.

Mary was born in New London, CT on August 24, 1912, the daughter of the late Michael F. Groden and Flavia (Grady) Groden. She was the 6th of 10 children and was raised in Cambridge and Green Harbor MA. She graduated from Cambridge High and Latin School and received her bachelor's degree in History from Emmanuel College in 1935.

Mary was the wife of the late Norbert V. Reardon, Jr. She is survived by three daughters, Susan R. Chisholm of Wellesley Hills, Jane R. Russell and Elizabeth R. Good of Cohasset and two sons, Norbert V. Reardon, III of Cohasset, Mark A. Reardon of Hanover and the late Lt. Dennis J. Reardon, USMC, who was killed in action, at the age of 24 on November 29, 1969, during the Vietnam War.

Recently, Mary was named a Gold Star Mother in honor of losing her son in service to his country. A ceremony, dedicating a monument in her honor, was held on Veterans Day, November 11, 2001, at the Woodside Cemetery in Cohasset MA.

In addition, Mary is survived by twelve grandchildren: Kristen C. Fisher of West Hartford CT, John K. Chisholm Jr. of Hingham, Emily R. Heythaler of Duxbury, Dennis J. Reardon, Amy R. Farber, and William J. Good, Jr. all of Cohasset, Michael A. Russell, Jr. of San Francisco CA, Julie E. Good and Elizabeth F. Good of South Boston and Daniel M. Reardon, Lauren A. Reardon and Terence M. Reardon all of Hanover MA.

She is also survived by three great-grandchildren: Cameron M. Fisher, Max A. Farber, Samuel A. Farber and many devoted nieces and nephews.

Mary also leaves two sisters, Elizabeth G. Dewire and Anne M. Groden both of Duxbury and a brother Joseph A. Groden of Plymouth. She was also the devoted sister of the late Alice M. Daly, Dr. Henry Groden, John F. Groden, Eleanor G. Groden, Dr. Harold M. Groden and Dorothy G. McLaughlin.

Mary and her husband Norbert were former residents of Newton Center from 1941 to 1955, until they moved to the South Shore where they raised their 6 children in Cohasset for 47 years.

Mary was employed as an elementary school teacher for many years in the Boston, Hull and Cohasset Public School Systems. She was also an active member of the Community Garden Club of Cohasset, the South Shore Art Center and was a regular communicant at St. Anthony's Church.

A former member of the Hatherly Country Club in Scituate, Mary was an avid sportswoman who enjoyed both tennis and golf throughout her life. She also loved the arts and enjoyed taking many courses at the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston. Her favorite hobbies included reading, arranging flowers, knitting and needlepoint. For many years, Mary also volunteered at The Paul Pratt Memorial Library in Cohasset.

A Funeral Mass and Liturgy celebrating Mary's life was held at 10:00 o'clock Friday morning, September 27, 2002, at St. Anthony's Church in Cohasset. Interment was at Holyhood Cemetery in Chestnut Hill MA.

Memorial donations in Mary's memory may be made to either Emmanuel College, 400 The Fenway, Room A 102, Boston, MA 02115 or to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library Building Fund, 106 South Main Street, Cohasset, MA 02025.

Arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, 1 Summer St. Cohasset MA.

Hazel L. Smith

Hazel L. (Morris) Smith, age 80, of Cohasset and formerly of Marshfield and Hingham, died Sept. 29, 2002 at the Jewish Memorial Hospital in Boston after a long illness.

Born in Tiltonsville, Ohio, she was raised and education In Martins Ferry, Ohio. During her years in Ohio, Mrs. Smith worked as a nurse's aide.

She was a Hingham resident for many years where, for 27 years, she was associated with the Hingham Mutual Fire Insurance Co., retiring at age 65 as assistant vice-president. She lived in Marshfield 15 years before moving to Cohasset four years ago.

She was a volunteer at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth as well as for the Children's Wish Foundation in Marshfield. She also volunteered for the "Talking Books" for the blind. Mrs. Smith was also a member of the Massachusetts Women's Insurance Association.

Mrs. Smith leaves her two sons, David J. Smith of Ridgefield, Conn. and Kenneth E. Smith of Omaha, Neb.; her sisters and brother, Margaret Young and William Morris, both of Clearwater, Fla., Evelyn Comegys of Baltimore, Md. and Mary Ellen Benfield of Taylorsville, N.C.; her grandchildren, Tamara Hatch of Plymouth, Lisa Douglas of East Weymouth, Adrienne Smith of Omaha, Neb. and Lauren Smith of Boston; and her three great-grandchildren. She was also the mother of the late Sharon S. Hatch.

A memorial service will be conducted at the Sunrise of Cohasset, 125 King St. (Route 3A) on Thursday, Oct. 3 at 10 a.m. Interment will be private.

Funeral arrangements were made by the Downing Cottage Funeral Chapel of Hingham.

Donations may be made in Mrs. Smith's memory to the South Shore Visiting Nurse Association, 100 Bay State Drive, Braintree 02184.

Karen Thorsell Sause

Karen Thorsell Sause died on Sept. 10, 2002.

Born in Framingham, she was the daughter of the late Ernest A. and Helen L. Thorsell:

A former Miss Maine, Dartmouth Carnival Queen, Skidmore Carnival Queen, and Renssalear Polytechnic Institute Queen, she graduated from Skidmore College in 1957 with a B.S. in Drama and a minor in Music. Upon graduation she moved to New York City, and for 14 years performed on and off Broadway, on television in soap operas and commercials, and in numerous show tours and packages.

In 1972 she moved to Cohasset, where she was a soloist at First Parish in Cohasset as well as an avid tennis player, sailor, and an active member of the League of Women Voters and the Cohasset Yacht Club.

Mrs. Sause moved to Wilmington in 1979 with her family, where she was a member of St. James Episcopal Church and sang in the choir for 20 years. She was a former VIP board member of the Wilmington Chamber of Commerce, the Cape Fear Country Club, and the Cape Fear Garden Club.

In 1982 she started VR Business Brokers, which she ran until 1992 when she took, over her husband's check cashing business after his death. She had retired in January 2000.

She was an active tennis player, as well as an avid gardener and gourmet cook. Her greatest passions were for food and music; she had a particular love for opera, musicals, and the liturgy of the church.

Mrs. Sause is preceded in death by her husbands George L. Sause and Don W. Cornelius.

She leaves two sons, Adam J. Cornelius and Ian M. Sause, his wife Amy, and three grandchildren, Kaitlyn, Lauren, and Emily; two stepdaughters, Barbara Sause-Roberts, her husband, Craig, and their children, Mark and Julia of Severna Park, Md.; Bailey Bartlett, her husband, John, and son, Benjamin of Jupiter, Fla.; a brother, E. Kevin Thorsell and his wife, Eleanor Hugh of Laconia, N.H.; a niece, Erika, and nephew, Nathan, and his wife, Cathy, of Sanford, Maine.

Services were held at St. James Episcopal Church, 25 S. 3rd St., Wilmington, N.C. 28401 by Rev. Steve Teague.

In lieu of flowers, contributions may be made to St. Francis Garden at the church.

Cohasset Board of Health to hold Flu Clinic:

There will be a Flu Clinic for Seniors (65+ yrs) and those people with chronic health problems such as cardiovascular and pulmonary disease, diabetes, renal dysfunction, HIV positive or immune compromised individuals, on Tuesday October 15, 2002 from 10 am – 12 pm at the Second Congregational Church (next to the Town Hall).

The Flu vaccine is free but seniors are reminded to bring their Medicare insurance card or Medicare "HMO" card with them and all are asked to wear a short sleeve shirt for ease of administration. Contact the Public Health Nurse for more info at 781-383-2210.

Dance hosted at The Garage

There will be a dance at The Garage on Friday, Oct. 18 from 7-10 p.m. Everyone in grades-six-and-up is welcome. There will be a door charge of $5 per person. Snacks and refreshments will be sold as well.

Red Cross hosts blood drive

The Red Cross has scheduled the next Cohasset Community Blood Drive for Wednesday, Oct. 9. The Blood Drive will be at St. Anthony Parish Center at the corner of South Main and Summer streets from 1 p.m. to 7 p.m. As in the past, baby-sitting will be provided from 3 to 5 p.m. Ample parking is available.

The American Red Cross is asking all eligible blood donors in the Cohasset area to give blood when the bloodmobile comes to Cohasset. According to Cathy Pray, director, "Only five out of every hundred people give blood, and the number of new donors decreased dramatically last year. First-time donors are urgently needed to replace donors who have moved away or become ineligible to donate."

"The biggest obstacle seems to be overcoming that initial fear," said Pray. "That's why we're counting on our regular donors to help by bringing a friend to this blood drive."

TheRed Cross area community of which Cohasset is a part requires over 1,600 pints of blood per day to meet usual demand for blood and blood products.

Most people can give blood through the American Red Cross. Potential donors must be at least 17 years of age, in good health and weigh over 110 pounds. In most cases, donors may give if they are on medication, but should know the names of these medications.

To register and make an appointment for donating at a specific time or if you have any questions, call Kevin or Ann O'Connor at 383-1290. You can also call the Red Cross at 1-800-448-3543.

Newcomer's Club kicks off season

The Scituate/ Cohasset Newcomers club will be hosting it's first social of the season with hors d'oeuvres and drinks this Saturday, Oct. 5, from 7-10 p.m. at the home of Scott and Carrie Peters, 27 Beach Plum Lane, Scituate.

The club is an organization open to all residents of Scituate and Cohasset for both social and charitable purposes. Through its sponsored activities, the club offers members the opportunity to meet new people through both special events and ongoing group activities.

You do not have to be new to join the Newcomers' Club. More details can be found in the membership form posted at the town library and the South Shore Community Center in Cohasset.

Sign up now and attend the first fall kickoff party this Saturday. For questions call 545-5202.

Arts Groups Ponder Air Base Arts Complex

The Board of the Hingham Symphony Orchestra invites artists, arts organizations and any interested parties to attend an organizational meeting to discuss the development of a multi-purpose, multi-arts complex at a site on the former Naval Air Base in Weymouth.

The board will assess the need for a regional facility that reflects and spurs the growth of the arts on the South Shore, and how that center might serve arts organizations, individual artists, and the entire community. The meeting is Wednesday, Oct. 9, 7 9 pm at the Ocean Village Nor0easter Function Hall, 33 Pidgeon Rd., on the base. For more information, or if you can0t attend the meeting but want to be involved, call Nina Wellford, 781-740-5694.

Boosters host breakfast

The Cohasset Soccer Boosters Club's annual Pancake Breakfast fundraiser will take place this coming Sunday, Oct. 6, from 8 a.m. to noon at the Cohasset Middle High School cafeteria. Christine McCann of the Boston Breakers will be hand to sign autographs from 10 to 11. There will be games for children and a raffle featuring gift certificates to many local restaurants and businesses and tickets to a Bruins and a Celtics game.

Tickets are $5 and are available from any High School soccer player or at the door. Proceeds support our High School soccer teams. For more information contact Debbie Shadd at 383-1624.

Silent film presented

The Cohasset Historical Society presents "Movie Queen" — step back in time to 1940 Cohasset. This silent film, presented courtesy of Mary Jeanette Murray promises an evening of nostalgia for those who remember such local sites as Delory Drug and the Jenny Gas Station. For those who don't, it's a chance to peek into the past.

The cast is made up entirely of Cohasset residents of the day, with Bettina Bancroft Gray starring as the "movie queen." Follow her adventures as she visits local businesses and mingles with the local "characters," while catching a glimpse of the way we were.

Come on Wednesday, Oct. 9 at 7:30 p.m. at the Lightkeepers' Residence. The event is free and light refreshments will be served. For information, call 781-383-1434.

Wrestling clinic offered

The Cohasset Recreation Department announces that Torin Sweeney, head CHS wrestling coach will offer a 12-session, fall wrestling clinic for area students in grades seven to 12. Classes will meet each Monday and Thursday from 6-8 p.m.

The first class and registration will be held Monday, Oct. 7 at Cohasset High School's new, all-purpose Sports Room at 6 p.m.. The fee for the 12 sessions is $50 per participant.

Questions regarding this unique wrestling opportunity may be directed to the recreation office at 781-383-4109.

This program is open to Cohasset as well as area students from surrounding towns. The program will end on Thursday, Nov. 21.

The 2002-2003 symphony season begins in October, and Hingham Symphony has announced an 8-month program that brings the very best classical music to audiences on the South Shore. With the continuing leadership of Music Director Jin Kim, the HSO has developed an orchestra composed of more than 50 of the very best graduate student and professional musicians from the conservatories in Boston, as well as a number of local professionals. Their passion for music and superior skill come through in performances that have been called "exciting, rewarding music-making" by critics and audience members alike.

The opening concert of the season will take place on Saturday, Oct. 19 at 8 p.m. at Sanborn Auditorium in the Hingham Town Hall. On the program are Dvorak0s festive Carnival Overture, Ginastera0s Variaciones Concertantes, and Brahm0s passionate Symphony No. 3. Jin Kim will give a pre-concert explanation of the program at 7:15 pm. All are invited to meet the musicians at a reception after the concert. On Oct. 18, HSO will perform the same program as a benefit concert for South Shore Hospital.

HSO performs 10 full-orchestra concerts and a chamber recital each season. In addition, members of the HSO bring a KidsConcert into elementary schools as requested. An active group of volunteers, called Fanfare, helps the Board and staff manage logistics of the season.

The HSO, as a non-profit organization, relies on contributions of all kinds from people across the South Shore, and will work closely with businesses to develop mutually beneficial relationships. For more information, to receive a brochure, or to buy tickets, please call the HSO at 781-740-5694.

Craft programs for kids

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept telephone registrations for grades K—three Arts and Crafts Program by calling 781-383-4109.

Arts and Crafts for grades K—three will be held from 3-4 p.m. on Mondays at the Joseph P. Osgood School.

The program will be five weeks in duration, costing $42 per child. Programs are scheduled to begin Monday, Oct. 21 and continue through November 25. The class will not meet on Monday, Nov. 11 — Veterans Day.

For information, details and registration, call the rec office at 781-383-4109.

Fall barn sale at fire museum

A fall barn sale will take place at Bare Cove Fire Museum on Saturday, Oct. 26 from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. at 19 Fort Hill St., rain or shine. Donations are gratefully accepted; please call 781-749-0028.

The Bare Cove Fire Museum has a history of supporting the cost of the non-profit museum by holding a bi-annual barn sale in a storage building in Bare Cove Park. Items for sale include skis and poles, books, records (78s and other sizes), tapes, speakers, dishes, furniture, toys, puzzles, clothes, computer games, tools, art, holiday decorations, sports equipment and household appliances. Aside from raising money on the day of the barn sale, museum members will be on hand to answer questions you may have about the history of firefighting in Hingham.

The museum's neighbor, the South Shore Model Railroad Club is having an open house the same day. Everyone is welcome to both venues!

Barnyard tours at Weir River Farm

Barnyard tours at Weir River Farm in Hingham are: Saturdays at 11 a.m., 1 p.m., and 3 p.m.; Sundays at 11 a.m. and 1 p.m., through Oct. 13.

Members of The Trustees of Reservations: free; Non-members: $2.

Bring your family and friends to Weir River Farm and spend an afternoon with the barnyard animals. Farm staff is on-hand to lead informal tours and answer questions. Park in lot at end of Turkey Hill Lane off Leavitt Street. Follow path through the forest to the farm.

Garage rentals

Garage rental is $75 for two hour blocks of time. However, there is some leniency on time constraints, allowing set up and clean up time, before and after the function.

While renters may utilize the games, electronic equipment, pool table, ping pong table, TVs, etc., they will be charged for additional fee for damages to any equipment or the facility.

A $50 security deposit check will be required prior to the function. This check will not be cashed unless there are damages due to use. Otherwise the check will be returned or destroyed after your function.

Trash and/or garbage must be removed before leaving the garage.

Call the recreation department at 781-383-4109for more information.

Helping kids make good decisions

Project Safeguard for Middle School students

On Tuesday, Oct. 8, seventh-grade students at Cohasset Middle School will participate in special program known as Cohasset Project Safeguard. What makes this program special is the fact that it attempts to involve the entire community in helping young people avoid making harmful decisions regarding the use and abuse of alcohol and drugs.

Alcohol and drug abuse is well recognized as a societal problem that has many contributing factors. The Project Safeguard Committee, comprised of educators, clergy, and parents, believes that the cooperation of the entire community is necessary if the drug and alcohol abuse problem is going to be effectively addressed. Project Safeguard will bring seventh-grade students and their parents together for a half-day of presentations and discussion designed to supplement school health education and guidance programs by encouraging students to make healthy choices and by providing support and guidance to parents in their effort to raise "drug-free" children. The Project is subsidized by the Parent-School Organization and community donations making it a true community effort.

This year's featured speaker is Ed Gerety. Gerety is one of America's top youth motivational speakers and leadership trainers. His inspirational, educational, and entertaining messages focus on respect, character, leadership, and personal responsibility.

Students will also view and discuss the play "Jesse's Journal," an innovative health program for middle school students developed by The Women's Crisis Center of Newburyport. This presentation uses drama as an educational tool to address a variety of middle school issues including family and peer relationships, appearance and behavior, dating, gender issues, substance use and abuse, and social and academic stress. Cohasset Middle School and High School students will act out the play. In addition, there will be opportunities for small group discussions and interaction among the students and adults.

Parents of seventh-grade students, as well as other interested community members are invited and encouraged to attend. The program will utilize a "campus on the common" format beginning at the Cohasset Town Hall at 7:30 a.m.. and also making use of the Second Congregational Church and St. Stephen's Church. The program for students will be completed by 11:30 a.m. to be followed by a parent luncheon.

For more information, or to reserve a space, contact Dr. Michael Gill, Health Education Coordinator (781-383-4205) or community liaisons Sally Sisson (781-383-6190), Karen Oronte 383-6737 or the Rev. Cliff Cutler (781-383- 1083).

Pilgrim Society Show House shines

By Kathleen Zigmont
CORRESPONDENT

The Designer Show House at The Pinehills, benefiting the Pilgrim Society and the Pilgrim Hall Museum in Plymouth, provides visitors an opportunity to see the latest in home decor, fabrics, fixtures, and appliances. It's also an opportunity to gather home decorating ideas and view the best work of some top area designers.

"Working in a brand new home gave us some freedom that we may not have had in other show houses, in that we can choose everything from the ground up. It's entirely our own vision."

The large, uncluttered entry welcomes visitors to the Designer Show House in the Pinehills.

And while this is the third Show House benefiting the Society, it's the first hosted in a brand new home in a brand new community, allowing designers to get in on the "ground floor" of the project, which is months in the making.

The home, a newly-built three bedroom home in The Pinehills development, was a blank canvas before the designers began their work, according to Rick Botieri of Cliffside Design Custom Interiors, a Plymouth interior decorating firm.

"Working in a brand new home gave us some freedom that we may not have had in other show houses, in that we can choose everything from the ground up. It's entirely our own vision," said Botieri.

But Botieri said doing a show house in a modern home, built with today's concept of an open floor plan, presents it's share of challenges, too.

"When you get a group of several different designers together that's always concern about the flow of the house. And in a house like this one, with each room open to the next, flow is especially important," said Botieri, who designed the furnishings for the home's spacious outdoor deck.

"But it works, and works beautifully. There are several different designers here, who did rooms in several styles, including traditional, contemporary, Oriental and country, but it works and blends well together," he said.

The first floor of the Cape Cod-style home greets visitors with soaring ceilings and open spaces. The foyer is graced with hand-painted pine branches and twin canvases of Native Americans and natural themes, paying homage to the pine forests of North America.. A view of the living room, painted in a striated technique in a soothing pale green, is visible from the front entrance to the home. The elegant dining room, furnished with French antiques and whimsical fabrics, is near the state-of-the-art open kitchen. Also on the first floor is a soothing sunroom,, the master bedroom and bath, furnished with Oriental flair.

Visitor Ginny Rothwell views the efficient and expertly designed kitchen.

Upstairs are two bedrooms, one furnished with fine antiques and the other in more contemporary elements, show visitors two different ways to create comfortable guest retreats. A library, filled with unusual objects from the around the world and boasting as it's centerpiece an 1810 rosewood piano forte refashioned into a partner's desk, is also upstairs.

Outside, the wide deck, which runs the length of the home, has been divided into separate areas for eating, entertaining and relaxing. Designer Botieri, who said he considers outdoor living to be an extension of indoor living, uses weather-safe fabrics and furniture to make the area comfortable and sophisticated.

The garden level of the home has been transformed, with a café and a boutique sporting wares from some of the area's best shops, including Octavia's in Duxbury, Voila in Norwell and the Assinippi Trading Co. In Hanover.

Visitors should leave plenty of time to visit the gardens of the home, which include a small waterfall, a Japanese garden and a terraced garden.

Some special events held in conjunction with the Show House included a floral arranging seminar, by Winston the florist Sept. 26. On Oct. 3, interior design experts from Boston and the South Shore will discuss "ready-to-wear" fashions for your home, design and space planning and tips on achieving and uncluttered, yet personalized, environment. And Oct., 1, a makeup and skin care presentation by Lily's Apothecary of Plymouth is scheduled along with a fashion show presented by Potpourri Designs of Hanover.

The 2002 Designer Show House at The Pinehills to benefit the Pilgrim Society and the Pilgrim Hall Museum runs through Oct. 13. Tickets are $20 available at the Pilgrim Hall Museum and the Plymouth Antiques Trading Company in Plymouth Center; Pilgrim furniture in Manomet; the Studio in Duxbury and Country Pine Imports, Ltd. In Norwell. For more information call the Pilgrim Hall Museum at 508-746-1620, ext. 6.

The upstairs library features among other beautiful furnishings an 1810 rosewood piano forte refashioned into a partner's desk as its centerpiece.

Faculty showcases its talent in Conservatory concert

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

The South Shore Conservatory of Music tested the waters last fall with a new Sunday afternoon event — the "Piano Faculty in Concert."

The test paid off, as the debut drew a sold-out audience to the Conservatory's Cox Hall auditorium. The Conservatory's Assistant Director Lanci Valentine noted recently that last year's audience members were astounded by the level of musical talent found in their own backyard. Many thought they had to go to Boston for this level and quality of music.

The piano faculty at the Conservatory is back this year for another concert this weekend, which is expected to be equally

Workshop prepares men and women for adventures in nature

By Amy Lamblaso
ALAMBIAS@CNC.COM

There's nothing like spending time in the great outdoors especially if you have the skills to make the experience safe and enjoyable.

For seven years the Cape Outdoor Discovery group has been dedicated to preparing nature loving women for outdoor adventures and encouraging those who haven't tried activities like kayaking and backpacking, to give it a go. The one-day fall Outdoor Skills Workshop is held annually at Camp Clark in Plymouth.

This year the group is opening up the grounds to women and men in two separate sessions.

"It's always been just for women, and been very successful," said Cape Outdoor Discovery Executive Director Don Dyer. "But we've decided to give the men's event another try — so we'll see."

The annual women's event kicks-off Saturday, Oct. 5, with the men's event following two weeks later —Oct. 20. And although several of the workshops offered will be common to both events, there are a few special attractions for each weekend.

Dyer said the workshops have something to offer both men and women will different interests. Both weekends will feature workshops for archery, surf casting, tree stands for archers and photographers, wildlife tracking, learning about Native American harvest tactics, kayaking and fire starting. The group will bring in experts from the area and Cape Cod to lead the workshops, Dyer said.

"Some of them have a real unique way of teaching these subjects," Dyer said, speaking specifically about "King," who will teach the wildlife tracking workshop on how to interpret

Burnt sugar custard

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

One of my favorite desserts is the classic Crème Caramel – the "burnt sugar" syrup as it sometimes called in American cookery marries nicely to the light, rather bland taste and texture of the custard. I wondered if I could combine the two in order to make a "burnt sugar custard" that would be richer and more satisfying than Crème Caramel and also show off the distinctive color and flavor of a caramelized sugar syrup.

Traditional Crème Caramel uses a combination of milk and either light cream or half-and-half. This produced custard that was too light for this purpose – I wanted something mouth-filling so I changed the mixture to milk and heavy cream in equal proportions. With 4 cups of liquid, I followed a basic rule of custards told to me by Julia Child: one egg per half cup of liquid for thickening. This would mean 8 eggs but I found that 4 whole eggs plus 4 yolks was a better combination – it made for a silkier, almost lighter dessert. A touch of salt and some vanilla extract were also added to boost flavor. Now I had to make the sugar syrup.

My basic formula for any sugar syrup is one part water to two parts sugar – this helps the sugar dissolve. (The water evaporates during cooking.) I finally settled on 1 1/3 cups sugar to 5/8 cup water. The trick is to cook the sugar syrup long enough to create flavor. If the syrup is too light, it's bland and is too sweet much like a fancy Grade A maple syrup. When cooked longer, however, it develops a slightly bitter flavor that has a lot of character. (Too much cooking, however, and the custard will indeed taste "burned.") The trick, I soon discovered, was to take the saucepan off the heat as soon as the syrup starts to take on color and swirl the contents. Do this a number of times, putting the saucepan back onto the heat, removing it, swirling, and repeating. This way you can slow down and control the process, getting just the color you want. I prefer the syrup to be a rich mahogany color. Don't forget that the syrup will continue to cook after it comes off the heat so watch it carefully.

My final adjustment was to add 3 tablespoons of granulated sugar to the eggs before adding the milk/sugar syrup mixture. I found that this took the edge off the bitterness of the caramelized sugar and gave the dessert a nice boost of flavor. By the way, beating the eggs with the sugar in an electric mixer was not only unnecessary but created too much froth.

There is no need to unmold this dessert – it can be served directly in the ramekins. I prefer this dessert warm or room temperature for best flavor. They will keep in the refrigerator overnight but I find that the flavor is less intense the next day.

BURNT SUGAR CUSTARD

Make sure that the custard is barely set in the center before taking it from the oven. The very center should be slightly undercooked. You can scale this recipe down to serve 6 by reducing everything by a quarter.

2 cups milk
2 cups heavy cream
1 1/3 cups sugar plus 3 tablespoons sugar
5/8 cup water
1/4 scant teaspoon salt
1 1/2 teaspoons vanilla
4 whole eggs
4 egg yolks

1. Heat the oven to 325 degrees. Put a kettle of water on to boil. Lightly butter 8 large custard cups and place them on a kitchen towel in a roasting pan.

2. In a large saucepan, heat the milk, cream, and salt together over medium heat until the mixture reaches 160 to 170 degrees on an instant read thermometer. (It should be very hot but not yet at a simmer.)

3. Meanwhile, place the sugar and water over high heat in a small saucepan. Cook until the mixture turns a rich mahogany color. (Swirl the pan a few times to remove sugar crystals from the sides. When the mixture starts to color, take the saucepan off the heat and swirl it for 10 seconds. This allows one to control the cooking process, slowing it down so the sugar syrup does not overcook. If the syrup is too light, it will not have much flavor. It should be a rich, deep mahogany color.)

4. Whisk the caramel syrup into the milk/cream mixture until well blended. (Some of the syrup may stick to the tines of the whisk – just keep whisking and most of it will eventually dissolve.) Whisk in the vanilla.

5. Whisk the whole eggs, yolks, and 3 tablespoons sugar to blend in a large bowl. Gradually add the hot cream mixture, whisking constantly. Strain the mixture if you like. Pour the custard mixture into the prepared custard cups. Bake until the custards are set, 40 to 60 minutes, rotating the roasting pan after 20 minutes. (The baking time can vary a great deal depending on the size and shape of the ramekins.) They should be barely set in the center and still jiggle a bit when moved. Remove to a cooling rack. Serve at room temperature or slightly warm. Serves 8

Dame Edna has fun with her South Shore subjects

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Hurricane Isidore may have taken it easy on our area, but the same cannot be said for Dame Edna.

The self-proclaimed Australian megastar landed in town last week and wasted no time in beginning her latest reign of comic terror — a three-week engagement at Boston's Colonial Theatre — by showering several of her South Shore "subjects" with a torrent of her patented barbs.

The Dame merely arched her eyebrows in humorous disdain when introduced to "Shirley" from Walpole, but by the time she got to "Estelle" from Sharon she was in rare form.

"We're women with a lot in common," the mauve-coiffed comedy maven explained to Estelle, an audience member at "A Night With Dame Edna" with the good fortune to be seated in the front orchestra.

"I used to make my own clothes, too. Apparently I was a little better at it."

If anyone else had made that comment, Estelle might have considered bringing a suit for slander. Edna, however, earned hearty laughs for this and other such verbal swipes made during more than two-hours of sidesplitting silliness. Before she was through, Edna had even persuaded Estelle to don a Prince Charles costume and join her on-stage in an over-the-top tribute to the British Royal Family.

Dame Edna performs at the Colonial Theatre through Oct. 13.

This is Dame Edna after all — created 46 years ago by Australian actor Barry Humphries — who describes her own "priceless gift" as "the ability to laugh at the misfortunes of others."

And laugh she does, along with appreciative audiences who will pass her their shoes if asked and laugh out loud when she lampoons them. Her show may take her all over the world, but Dame Edna always manages to make personal connections wherever she visits.

"I've dated Ben Affleck and Matt Damon," she points out. And her romantic adventures may soon lead her to Foxborough. "Even the Patriots' little Tommy Brady is after me."

("A Night With Dame Edna" continues at the Colonial Theatre, 106 Boylston Street, Boston, through Oct. 13. For tickets, call 617/931-2787.)

footprints and tracks left by humans and different wildlife. "It's all very fascinating."

Highlighting the women's workshops is backpacking, fishing preparation and cooking, where to find wild, edible plants and how to construct a survival shelter using all natural materials. Dyer said there are currently about 20 women signed-up for the weekend workshop and he is hoping to see a similar turnout as past years of close to 40 or 50 women at the event.

"We have a core group of women that come every year and just have a great time," Dyer said. "Hopefully some men will hear about what's going on and come enjoy what we have also."

Camp Clark is an 83-acre area in South Plymouth owned by the YMCA in Old Colony. In addition to the outdoor workshop series, Cape Outdoor Discovery offers field classes for school groups — the staff has traveled to Falmouth, Sandwich and other beach areas around the South Shore and Cape Cod in past years, a residential outdoor education program typically for school groups to stay overnight and experience and learn about the wildlife in the area. Outdoor discovery puts on teacher workshops for a state-wide summer training program focused on elementary science education and hosts a winter series of workshops in February as well.

"Camp Clark is really a wonderful site," Dyer said. "It's been here for years and has really taken on a nice setting."

Women and men who come along for the weekend can participate in two sessions of workshops, with the first session beginning at 9:30 a.m., the second at 1 p.m. and ending at 4 p.m. A day learning about different aspects of wilderness from expert instructors costs $55 and an extra $15 for an overnight stay in one of the cabins.

"The area is just so great to have an event like this," Dyer said of the vast acres of ocean, marshland and forest land. "It turns out to be a great weekend with the group we have."

Add color to the early autumn garden

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Part 2

As the season changes, warm, sunny days intermingle with crisp, comfortable evenings. Our glorious fall weather and occasional soaking rains have provided South Shore gardeners with the ideal conditions to prepare our landscapes for the colder days ahead. Many drought-stressed lawns and plants have regained a healthier appearance in recent weeks in response to our abundant rainfall despite the fact that the most are preparing to enter a dormant period. New plantings should become easily established given autumn's warm soils and consistent moisture. Barring a severely cold, dry winter, the outlook for the upcoming growing season seems optimistic.

While many of the perennials in the mixed border tend to decline during early autumn, the fall garden is not without its star performers. Few rival the ease and beauty of the carefree sedums. Commonly known as stonecrop or live-forever, this broad genus of succulent plants includes upright, clump-forming types ideal for the middle of the border and trailing, stoloniferous varieties suitable for the front of the garden. Flower color may be white, yellow, pink or red and may be borne during different seasons depending on the variety. Although the majority of sedum family members are not too fussy about their growing conditions, most favor full sun in well-drained, sandy soils.

Widely grown throughout our area, Sedum 'Autumn Joy' provides an especially long season of interest. Its fleshy, gray-green leaves appear on un-branched stalks topped by broad flower heads that resemble broccoli in July and gradually produce pink, star-shaped flowers in late summer. As the fall progresses, the flattened domes acquire a deeper tone of reddish-bronze before turning a warm copper which persists throughout the winter as snow collects on the stiff seed heads.

Additional upright varieties include a number of excellent cultivars that resemble 'Autumn Joy' in appearance and growth habit although their flowers lack some of the lasting qualities of their cousin. Sedum 'Brilliant' and S. 'Neon' bear electric, purplish-pink clusters and S. 'Stardust' is similar with flowers of snowy white. 'Frosty Morn' displays stunning variegated foliage with a thick white rim around each leaf adorned by pink and white flower clusters which create a striking appearance even from a distance. A handsome newer cultivar, Sedum 'Matrona', exhibits dramatic, rigid, reddish-purple stems and leaves slightly tinged rosy-purple topped by massive flower heads producing a multitude of star-shaped, dusty pink blooms.

For the front of the border, look for Sedum 'Vera Jameson', a lovely selection that forms a mound, 8-inches tall, of handsome, rosy-purple leaves and stems that produce small clusters of rose-pink flowers. Foliage color intensifies as the temperatures cool down. Sedum sieboldii exhibits blue-gray leaves rimmed with a thin, rosy band complemented by pretty pink flowers in autumn. These distinctive, carefree perennials offer an attractive foliar display all season and their showy, early autumn flowers sparkle in the late season landscape.

Our wetlands are ablaze with color, as asters, goldenrod and grasses glow in the warm midday sunshine. Many of these hardy wildflowers escape yearly from my butterfly meadow and burst into bloom during the fall season having eluded my periodic attempts to weed them out. Once they begin to flower, their cheerful exuberance earns them a temporary reprieve until their colorful blossoms fade.

Hardy fall-blooming Asters offer a wonderful diversity of heights and colors, all characteristically producing a profusion of single or semi-double disk flowers with yellow centers in vibrant tones of rich royal purple, glowing pink, vivid raspberry and glistening white. Although somewhat coarse in appearance in addition to having a preponderance for sprawling, their fantastic floral display during the fall season more than compensates for their occasionally weedy demeanor.

The showiest, most colorful members of the genus tend to be hybrids of our native species, the New England asters (A. novae-angliae) and the New York asters (A. novi-belgii), commonly referred to as Michelmas Daisies. Recent cultivars boast a rainbow of colors ranging in height from barely a foot tall to over 4 feet in stature. Aster 'Alma Potschke' is a personal favorite for its stunning profusion of blooms in a unique color of bright, salmon-rose on 2- to 3-foot stems. I am equally fond of Aster 'Purple Dome', a shorter variety completely smothered in elegant, deep purple daisies for weeks. Mature clumps are spectacular when combined with Sedum 'Autumn Joy', a compact charming goldenrod called Solidago 'Golden Fleece' and the large-leafed lamb's ear, Stachys 'Helen Von Stein'.

The majority of fall-blooming asters perform best given moist soils in full sun. When grown in partial shade, they tend to sprawl and flop all the more. Moist soils are essential to minimize browning of the lower leaves and overhead watering should be avoided to reduce powdery mildew. Pinch young shoots regularly until mid-July to keep plants compact, bushy and increase the quantity of flowers that are delightful in fall bouquets. Division every two to three years in early spring is advisable to rejuvenate woody clumps and reduce their tendency to wander.

Asters and sedums offer hardy, low maintenance color to brighten the sunny border in autumn. When combined with the lingering blooms of roses, Russian Sage, and members of the Rudbeckia family, the declining foliages of early blooming perennials are all but forgotten. In addition to their spectacular color, these sturdy fall-bloomers are an irresistible lure to multitudes of bees and butterflies.

Faculty showcases its talent in Conservatory concert

well-received. The concert is scheduled for Sunday, Oct. 6 at 4 p.m., once again in Cox Hall at the South Shore Conservatory's Hingham facility.

For the performance, nine pianists/instructors will perform Romantic and early 20th century period works by Chopin, Debussy, Liszt, Scriabin and Rachmaninoff. One faculty member will also play an original piece. All ticket sales will go toward a planned 1,000 square-foot extension to the Conservatory building.

As it was last year, this year's concert has been organized by the Conservatory's Piano Department Chairperson and Dean of Students Hui-Min Wang, who has recruited most of the faculty performing for the showcase. Wang is also one of the concert performers, all of whom have impressive training and background credentials. The faculty includes; pianists and Boston area residents Shu-Hui Chen, Stephen Deitz, Margarita Gurevich, Paul Hoffman, Juyeon Kang, John Kramer, Barbara Lysakowski and Jane L. Viemeister.

Wang herself is Taiwanese native currently living in Weymouth and beginning her fifth year at the South Shore Conservatory teaching at both the Hingham and Duxbury campuses. Her musical career and trajectory from Taiwan to the South Shore has been an intriguing one, with stops in Germany, Austria, Texas and Boston along the way. The 36-year-old pianist/violist began her musical training at age four, earned the Excellence Award in Artistic Talents from the Taiwanese Ministry of Education at 15, then, inspired by a postcard of the Alps, convinced her parents she should study in Munich, Germany. "Growing up in Taiwan and studying classical music, it seemed like Europe was the place to go to really get the kind of background training that I wanted," Wang said. "Europe was where the music had traditionally come from while Taiwanese culture was very Eastern. When I arrived in Munich, I found everything about the city — the surroundings, the people, the culture and the architecture — very complimenting to learning the traditions of the music as I heard them."

After six years in Munich, Wang's studies took her to Vienna, then to Waco, Texas and Baylor University, mainly through the circumstance that a Bulgarian pianist she had studied with in Vienna accepted a teaching position in Texas. Wang earned a Masters degree in Music Education from Baylor, then after brief further study in Boston, worked as an opera coach and staff pianist at a school in Hartford, Conn. before coming back to Boston to teach at the New England Conservatory.

"I decided to come back to Boston because I thought the city was more important culturally," Wang said. "Since I've been in America, I've always found the culture around the classical music industry to be very positive and uplifting, where back in Europe the training was always so traditional and conservative. There was more of an openness among musicians and patrons here, and people were very friendly and optimistic."

Wang added that Sunday's piano faculty concert will be intimate and informative as well as entertaining, with performers offering stories and background information about the selected pieces. She also mentioned that Conservatory staff expect the show to repeat last year's sellout and advises customers to "get there early to get a good seat."

Tickets for the "Piano Faculty in Concert program are $15, $12 for students and seniors. The South Shore Conservatory is located at 1 Conservatory Drive in Hingham. For more information call 781-749-7565, ext. 23

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 2

Retrograde Mercury returns to the sign Virgo at 5:27 a.m. and prepares to align with Saturn. All important decisions, signings or new beginnings are definitely off limits. The Leo moon interacts with Venus and Pluto this morning, prompting you to review your priorities and readjust your sights. Be more forgiving and sensitive to the needs of others. Work out differences and heal relationships that have broken down. Pursue activities that help you to relax and maintain perspective.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 3

Wake up in a good mood. Focus on the positives instead of getting caught up in worries or self-doubts. Take on a busy work agenda. Tackle jobs that have been left hanging and need a finishing touch. Clean out the clutter; reorganize, make repairs. The Leo moon becomes inactive at 9:16 a.m., when it aligns with Saturn. A Virgo moon takes over at 10:52 a.m., setting the stage for a challenging 2 1/2 day period. Retrograde Mercury forms a stressful 90-degree alignment to Saturn at 7:10 p.m.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 4

The moon continues to travel in Virgo, ruled by the planet Mercury. That means that there are likely to be unexpected snags or reversals. Allow extra time; be flexible. A lunar alignment to Pluto at 11:37 a.m. may spark emotional thunderstorms. Stay busy with practical projects; jobs that need to be finished or redone. Zero in on health and physical fitness concerns. Start a new diet; spend extra time working out with exercise programs.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 5

Stormy astrological weather continues until 9:22 a.m., when the Virgo moon aligns with Saturn and becomes inactive. Avoid morning hassles. As the day goes on, moods lighten and brighten. The moon enters Libra at 10:51 a.m., beginning the final stage to the new moon culmination. A lunar alignment to Neptune affects the evening. Renew your spirit through time spent in solitude, meditation, art or music.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 6

The new moon culminates at 7:17 a.m., 13-degrees of the sign Libra. In addition, the sun and moon form flowing 60-degree contacts to optimistic Jupiter. The moon continues active travel in Libra throughout the day, making it ideal for social activities. The planet Mercury begins direct travel at 3:26 p.m., and the green light goes on for new beginnings of all kinds.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 7

Get an early start to this day. The most auspicious period for launching enterprises occurs before 8:29 a.m., when the Libra moon aligns with Saturn and becomes inactive. At 9:57 a.m. the moon enters Scorpio, traveling there today and tomorrow. In addition, an applying alignment of the sun and Pluto affects this period. Influences are prime for beginning new studies, research projects or any type of investigation. Spend time alone this evening. Meditate for inner peace and vision.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 8

Yesterday's advice applies to today as well. If you have been considering making a major change in your life, now is the time to initiate. The moon continues its travel in Scorpio, and the sun aligns with Pluto, the planetary ruler of Scorpio. This is an excellent combination of influences for achieving self-improvement. You can recognize and break bad habits, eliminate negativity, free yourself from fears. Open your mind to new possibilities.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 9

A 90-degree alignment of Mercury and Saturn urges you to streamline your workload; don't make any more commitments until the backlog has been cleared. The Scorpio moon becomes inactive at 8:38 a.m., when the moon aligns with Mercury. At 10:21 a.m. the moon enters Sagittarius. Kick back and mellow out completely this evening.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 10

The planet Venus takes the spotlight today. At 2:35 p.m. Venus, standing at 16-degrees of Scorpio, begins retrograde travel until November 21. This is not a favorable period for making major financial investments or long-term commitments to others. On the other hand, it brings a time to reflect, reorient, refocus; redress the balance in personal or professional relationships that have become too one-sided. An upbeat Sagittarius moon is a major plus in today's planetary picture.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 11

Gear up for another challenging day. Mercury returns to the sign Libra at 1:56 a.m., remaining there until October 31. The planet Saturn turns retrograde at 8:58 a.m., 29-degrees Gemini. This is a time to conserve and consolidate what you have rather than borrowing, spending, taking risks. The Sagittarius moon forms stressful contacts to Mars at 9:01 a.m. and Saturn at 12:07 p.m., when it becomes inactive. Maintain a low profile. Don't rock the boat in business or romance. The moon enters conservative Capricorn at 1:45 p.m.

Dead crow tests positive

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

West Nile Virus (WNV) has arrived in Cohasset once again.

After several dead birds tested positive for the virus last year, the Board of Health announced two weeks ago that a crow found dead at the Cohasset Golf Club has tested positive for the virus.

The disease can prove fatal in humans, especially in the case of the elderly and the young. It is transmitted by the bite of an infected mosquito.

Health Agent Joseph Godzik said that residents should not panic, but take the discovery as an opportunity to be more diligent in terms of preventing exposure to the virus.

"We're no more worried about it than we were earlier this year," said Godzik. "This is not a great surprise because we had six or seven of them last year. It was just a matter of time before we found a dead bird that was positive."

The main difference between this year and last, and perhaps the reason that it took this long to find a bird that was infected is that the Massachusetts Department of Public Health is only testing dead crows and

Issue is not benched at angry meeting

Haddad attacked for taking action

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

When the sprinkler head above Town Manager Mark Haddad began to leak during Tuesday's selectmen's meeting, it appeared the session would be cut short.

After a tempestuous meeting that was more vaudeville than public debate, involving the naming of the baseball fields and the revitalization plans for the Harbor, it was water, appropriately, that had arrived to cool the heat of flaring tempers.

But, with a fire truck rumbling outside, the sprinkler still dripping and several firefighters in gear waiting in the side hallway, the meeting continued and took a turn for the worse.

Mary Larson, of the Cohasset Common Historic District Commission, asked Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan for five minutes to address the board on an issue that was not on the agenda.

Larson was upset that Haddad had placed two benches on the Town Common after the CCHDC had voted against the proposal, preferring the benches to be placed across the street on the island in front of Town Hall.

Sullivan responded that he would like to table the issue until next meeting. Larson persisted and spoke, prodding the committee to force Haddad to send an apology for placing park benches on the Town Common after her committee had said no. Larson cited two letters from the commission to the board which generated no official response, as well as, what she described as bad publicity for the commission in the Cohasset Mariner. Larson also accused Haddad of leaking pro-bench letters to the press (Those letters, which were in response to a short article that had

Housing issues on fast track: Subject of Oct. 21 Master Plan forum

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The arrival of AvalonBay and its 200-unit Chapter 40B project in Cohasset has sparked a new level of awareness around Cohasset when it comes to civic planning.

One reason that Cohasset is presently so vulnerable to comprehensive permits filed under Chapter 40B (which allows the builder to skirt local zoning laws) is the lack of preventative action taken by the town to address its affordable housing needs.

But not for long.

Convened in 2000 to draft a Master Plan, the Growth and Development committee, a 10-member board, hopes to present a draft to the Annual Town Meeting next year. There is also a possibility that the committee could send at least a finalized version of the housing aspect of the plan to Annual Town Meeting for approval in order to address Chapter 40B as quickly as possible.

"We are really hoping to have a draft of the plan available this spring," said Town Planner Elizabeth Harrington, who serves on the board. "It all depends on how quickly we move through the approval process, and getting approval from key boards such as the Planning Board and the Selectmen."

The process is currently in what Harrington termed a "vetting of ideas" period. Two weeks ago, the committee held a

One-way traffic starts Tuesday

The first tangible example of the Downtown Revitalization Project arrives in Cohasset on Tuesday when the downtown portion of Elm Street becomes one-way on a one-month trial basis.

The street will be one way from Hingham Institution for Savings to Cohasset Hardware.

"This is the first thing people are going to see in regards to the Downtown Revitalization project," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "We really need the input from the businesses and the community."

Haddad urged all those with input to call the selectmen's office so that the board could make an informed decision that reflects the will of the people.

The board approved the one-month trial after Haddad and Craig Miller of the Waterfield Design Company visited with area business owners to gauge whether a trial would work.

Haddad said that there will be ample signage on Tuesday to direct motorists.

NO PLACE FOR HATE

Sidewalks on agenda

Selectmen have announced that they will discuss Special Town Meeting Article 10, which would construct sidewalks on Forest Ave. on Oct. 22.

There is not enough money in the budget to fund the entire project, but there area a variety of options available to the town, ranging from not doing any work, to doing some of the work, to borrowing and doing all of the work.

The Special Town Meeting is Saturday, Nov. 18.

Bradley holds office hours

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D–Hingham, will be holding district office hours Thursday, Oct. 10, at the Hingham Sons of Italy Hall, upstairs, 88 Chief Justice Cushing Highway, from 5 p.m. to 6 p.m.

If you are unable to attend this scheduled office hours, but would like to meet with the Representative, call (617) 722-2120 to schedule an appointment at your convenience.

Town History Committee to present maps to schools

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The Committee on Town History brought something important to the selectmen's meeting last night and it wasn't their maps.

It was instead, laughter.

In meeting full of issues laced with vitriol, the committee's presentation of a large map, copies of which will be presented to the schools and the town hall, was a shining example of cross-organizational teamwork. The feel-good presentation brought smiles to the faces of all in attendance, and even incited laughter – no small task given the candor of the rest of the evening.

Wigmore Pierson, chairman of the Committee on Town History, and Ruth Fennessy, schools curriculum coordinator, pose with the new Cohasset map to be used in the schools.

Chairman Wig Pierson arrived with the full complement of his committee to present their innovative attempt to tie in town history and the Cohasset Public Schools curriculum.

The map is only one phase of the overall project (headed by education sub-committee chairman Lou Harvey), which will include a timeline that juxtaposes major Cohasset events with world events. According to school officials, who also turned out in force, the relationship has provided the schools with valuable curriculum material that will allow the children to gain a better understanding of the world at large, through the medium of Cohasset. The maps will be provided to the first, third, and eleventh grades, and will help build student's map skills.

But it wasn't as simple as just providing the schools with a map and a timeline (which is still under construction).

"What I have found during the whole project is that we had some state curriculum requirements and the challenge was whether we could really translate the feeling of town history and the emotion of town history into the curriculum system, which is so structured," said Harvey.

A willingness to work though the issue – on both sides – allowed for creative solutions to meeting the state's guidelines.

"It's been great working with the Committee on Town History," said Ruth Fennessy, the curriculum director for the Cohasset school system. "They've just been so open to all the suggestions that we have had, it's been so terrific."

The committee also announced that a gift box set of the three volumes of Cohasset Town History will be available in "handsome packaging" in time for Christmas. Pierson also reported that the committee was "on-time and ahead of budget." The committee recently published the "Narrative History of Cohasset Volume III," by Jacqueline Dormizter.

"I think that the town has been very receptive and very enthusiastic," said Pierson. "I think that you saw tonight that the Selectmen are very receptive, the teachers are receptive, the Principle of the Osgood School is very receptive, and hopefully it will be a teaching tool about our town that will be able to be used for a long time."

Town common adds Romney to its résumé

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

If you did a double take when you saw the latest Mitt Romney for Governor television ad, you weren't alone.

Featured as the backdrop to the ad is a familiar site to Cohasseters – the Cohasset Town Common.

"If Shannon O'Brien wants to use the Common, that's great."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

The lush, green Common has quietly built an on-screen career that any actor would envy. Apearances in the movies "Housesitter" and "The Witches of Eastwick" along with numerous commercials, from Maxwell House to Hood Ice Cream have firmly entrenched the Common as the preeminent example of small town New England.

While mainstream Hollywood hasn't come calling this year, the commercial business is thriving..

The common's current representation, Town Manager Mark Haddad, is always pleased to see his client "in the pictures."

"I got a phone call from a filming crew," said Haddad. "They said that they wanted to shoot a commercial on the Common, and I said "Absolutely," I never say no."

Haddad noted that the Romney commercial was strictly business and maintained that the appearance was not an endorsement by the town in any way. (Rumor has it the Common itself is a registered independent).

"In fact, this week, a helicopter will fly over town for a Walgreen's commercial, so it has nothing to do about party," said Haddad. "If Shannon O'Brien wants to use the Common, that's great."

Each company that uses the Common as a backdrop is requested to make a donation to the Town Common Gift Fund.

Haddad said that he believed the Romney campaign contributed, but he was unsure of the exact amount.

Issue is not benched at angry meeting appeared the week before in the Mariner about the CCHDC being upset with the benches, were a part of the selectmen's correspondence and therefore, part of public record).

From that point, the meeting devolved into an insult-fest by members of the audience, directed at mostly at Haddad and partly at Sullivan for wishing to table the discussion. Members of the audience spoke out of turn without giving their name and address as is required, which led to a rumbling of insults.

Marian Atkinson of the CCHDC called Haddad "arrogant" and his actions "inappropriate." An unidentified male in the back row yelled out, "He thinks he's God. He should be fired."

The arguments spilled over after the meeting, several expletives were fired at town representatives in the parking lot.

The CHDC voted back in May to allow the benches be placed temporarily directly in front of Town Hall on the grassy area under the trees near the mailbox. The commission wanted them off the common side out of concern for safety of senior citizens because children play Frisbee and soccer there.

But despite being reminded of the terms of the CHDC certificate, Haddad placed the benches where he originally wanted them facing the duck pond under the trees near Long Road [where the farmers market is held].

For Sullivan, Tuesday's brouhaha was a bit too much, considering that he thought that the issue was dealt with.

"I thought that it was totally unnecessary to bring it back to a public forum," said Sullivan. "I thought the situation was being taken care of."

Sullivan attended a recent meeting of the Cohasset Common Historic District Commission to address its concerns. He told the members he would have Haddad apologize for the way he went about the process and would re-submit paperwork to allow the CCHDC to vote again on the issue.

Two benches installed on the Town Common caused a brouhaha at Tuesday's selectmen's meeting.

What was more surprising was that the vote would have passed unanimously in support this time around.

"I attended the meeting and they were emotionally frustrated with the fact that benches were put on the common," said Sullivan. "But unanimously, they went on to say that the benches went in right place."

The Mariner obtained a copy of the minutes from that Sept. 18 meeting, which corroborated Sullivan's statement.

"The Commission agreed that the placement of the benches is appropriate to suit the needs of the seniors and agrees that the benches should stay where they are," states the minutes. It goes on to require, "a re-application to the CCHDC, an apology, and a promise not to act independently with disregard for the CCHDC's decisions."

"They were strictly emotional over the fact that Mark had done that without their permission," said Sullivan. "I spent an hour at that meeting, I apologized, I told them that I didn't think that the process was handled correctly, but that the benches ended up in the right places."

Sullivan said that the letter of apology and the new paperwork was on its way. That was enough, according to CCHDC member Peter Wood who was not present at Tuesday's meeting.

"Watching on television, I felt badly for Mark," said Wood. "He was blindsided, he had no clue what was coming. I am a member of that commission and I had no idea that the benches were going to be discussed that night and I'd be interested to know how many other members of the commission were aware of it as well."

It was even more surprising to Wood, because he felt confident that the issue had been dealt with.

"It was a dead issue," said Wood about the Sept. 18 CCHDC meeting. "It was a done deal. Mike was going to back and the town was going to reapply for the benches in their existing condition. It makes our commission look petty to be taking this approach, given everything that is happening in the world right now."

"I didn't tell Mark that he had to have it done by Friday," said Sullivan. "He probably has it on his list of things to do, but I can see why he might not have seen it as a high priority."

Larson said she was not upset after the selectmen's meeting and that is was important that the town follow procedure.

"There is a permitting process here and they ignored it and they put permanent structures on the common after we said they could not," said Larson. "They have to be held to the same standard as other citizens."

Haddad refused to comment on the matter.

Selectman Merle Brown felt that Haddad overstepped his boundaries with the decision to unilaterally place the benches and "deserved to take some heat." At the time, Haddad said he checked with town counsel and was informed that as executive of the town he was entitled to do as he saw fit on the Common.

Selectman Fred Koed said that it was important for the town to follow its own rules.

"I do feel that — even the US Congress and the Massachusetts legislature — that when legislative bodies make rules and exempt themselves, they shouldn't be doing that," said Koed. "If the rule is good enough for the townspeople, the town itself should follow it also."

Dead crow tests positive

blue jays. Last year, all dead birds were tested.

"This year there have been very few submissions," said Godzik. "With them only testing crows and blue jays, they eliminated a lot of the other birds that had been sent in for testing in the past."

The good news is that as the temperatures cool, the mosquito population dies off.

"We're getting to the end of the mosquito season now," said Godzik. "But as long as they are here, there is the potential for West Nile to spread, so it is important to take normal precautions (see sidebar)."

On Sept. 6, an 81-year-old Weymouth, who contracted WNV, died. Two others, an 87-year-old woman from Boston and an 80-year-old female from Malden, have also died after contracting WNV. Overall, 17 Massachusetts residents have tested positive for the disease, two of whom are believed to have contracted the virus out of state.

"The whole prevention effort is to try and avoid this," said Dr. Alfred DeMaria, chief of communicable diseases for the state Department of Public Health. "We really need to make sure our elderly know how to protect themselves."

The MDPH maintains a Web site on West Nile Virus which is located at http://www.state.ma.us/dph/wnv.

West Nile prevention tips

There is no vaccine for West Nile virus (WNV). The best way to protect yourself is to keep mosquitoes from biting you. Follow these steps every summer if you live in or visit an area with mosquitoes:

- Avoid outdoor activities between dusk and dawn, if possible, since this is the time when mosquitoes are most active.
- If you must be outdoors when mosquitoes are active, wear a long-sleeved shirt and long pants.
- Use a mosquito repellent that contains DEET (the chemical N-N-diethyl-meta-toluamide) and follow the directions on the label. DEET can be toxic if overused. Never use DEET on infants and do not apply repellents to the face or hands of children. Avoid using repellents with DEET concentrations above 10-15 percent for children and with concentrations above 30-35 percent for adults. Cream, lotion or stick formulas are best for use on the skin. However, avoid products with high amounts of alcohol, as these may be absorbed through the skin.
- Most mosquito repellents will remain effective for many hours, so it is not necessary to reapply the repellent. Once inside, wash off insect repellents thoroughly with soap and water.
- Take special care to cover up the arms and legs of children playing outdoors. When you bring a baby outdoors, cover the baby's carriage or playpen with mosquito netting.
- Fix any holes in your screens and make sure they are tightly attached to all your doors and windows

Making fire hydrants easier to locate

The Water Commission has taken steps to make it easier for the Fire Department to find fire hydrants.

Every second counts when responding to a fire," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission, "so we have made it easier to find all 396 Fire hydrants in Cohasset (including the 58 hydrants supplied by Aquarion Water of Hingham) by painting the caps of the hydrants with a highly reflective glass-bead paint, which is similar to the paint used on street line markings, which will make it much easier to find fire hydrants at night or in a storm."

"We also have spent $10,000 to provide the Fire Department with a laptop loaded with software that will help them locate fire hydrants," said Water Commissioner Glenn Pratt, who managed this project.

"With this software," said Pratt, "the Fire Dept. Shift Commander, while on the way to an incident, will be able to input the address of the fire, and a map will appear on the computer screen showing all fire hydrants in a 600 foot radius, locating all nearby hydrants by the closest street address. The 911 dispatch center has also been provided with this software."

"Additional information will also be displayed," explained "including the fire flow available at each hydrant, or the size of the water main serving the hydrant if fire flow is not available, and any hazard materials or conditions known to be at that location. This system, which is based on the Water Department Geographic Information system (GIS) database for the water system will be updated periodically as the Water Department adds new hydrant locations."

The Water Department, as part of its annual fire hydrant maintenance program, has also been testing, greasing, and painting all of the fire hydrants, and has been clearing brush and shrubs around each hydrant.

meeting that addressed the issues of Route 3A including traffic and commercial areas. On Oct. 21, the committee will address the current housing situation. Meetings that will address the town's services, facilities and natural and cultural resources will follow.

"We've been through the 'vision process,'" said Harrington. "That was really to get the overarching themes as to what the community wants, where it sees itself, and identifying what values to the town holds."

The committee has yet to make recommendations on any of the areas, but that could change after the housing meeting. The committee is tentatively planning to hold a meeting to make recommendations on the housing aspect of the Master Plan in the upcoming weeks in order to jump start that part of the process.

"I think people will be particularly interested in this particular talk (on housing) given the environment and the comprehensive permit that is pending," said Harrington. "We really need to look at what the affordable housing situation is in Cohasset, and what strategies the town would like to adopt to address that situation."

"I think there is a real impetus to get an affordable housing plan together."
— Selectman Tom Callahan

Selectmen Tom Callahan, who is also a member of the committee, said that clarifying the town's direction in terms of affordable housing is key to protecting the town's interests.

"I think there is a fast track on (the housing issue)," said Callahan. "In light of the ongoing interest in some kind of senior housing development, the presence of the 40B project, I think there is a real impetus to get an affordable housing plan together."

Callahan said that to this point, he feels the committee has done a good job of making sure all the town's interests are represented.

"Everyone is welcome," said Callahan. "We hope that people will come and let us know what they think."

That being said, it is important that those that were invited to the discussion attend, because their input is vital to the success of the process.

"All of the people we targeted for invitation have a particular interest or stake," said Callahan. "We can't accomplish our goals without information."

- 42 percent of the housing was built before 1940.
- 30 percent was built between 1940-1970.
- 2001 single family home median sales price — $630,000.
- Average single family tax bill is $5410.

Master Plan Goals

The Master Plan looks to address the following areas:

- Forming a Goals and Policies Statement.
- Land use analysis and plan.
- Housing market analysis and plan.
- Economic development plan.
- Natural and cultural resources plan.
- Open space and recreation plan.
- Service and facilities plan.
- Traffic/circulation/transportation plan.
- Financial plan and objectives.

Master plan vision statement

Cohasset in 2020 is a historic residential community renowned for its quality of life, the exceptional beauty of its coastal setting, a lively village center and harbor front, all supported by effective and sustainable town management:

The town's natural beauty and wildlife habitats are assured by a network of protected open spaces and parks.

Prudent planning and careful management of the town's natural resources protect the quality and quantity of the town's waters - drinking water supply, streams and wetlands, and coastal waters.

The harbor and the village center serve the community with the variety and number of successful businesses appropriate to these area's scale and character.

Historic buildings and sites have been preserved for future generations.

New or expanded homes are appropriate to the context of their neighborhood and surrounding natural setting and resources.

The town continues to provide and excellent education for its young people.

Housing is available for households with a range of incomes, as well as for senior citizens and town employees.

Route 3A businesses contribute both to the attractiveness and the tax base of Cohasset, through sensitive landscape, appropriate building and parking design and effective traffic management.

Prudent and cost-effective town management provides quality town services while maintaining reasonably stable taxes.

Numerous organizations, activities and events celebrate the historic and cultural heritage of Cohasset.

Harbor is on hold again

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

After being bogged down in another discussion, the Board of Selectmen placed the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation's proposal for harbor improvement on hold for a second-straight week Tuesday, in order to further clarify the issue.

The issue came up last week, when Dean Rizzo of the CRC asked the board for support, in principle, as to the need for improvements because of safety. The CRC does not want to invest more money in the project if the town will not support it. The selectmen are considering placing an "concept" article on the warrant that would allow the town to vote on the issue.

Selectmen Ronnie McMorris made a motion to take the article off of the warrant for the upcoming Nov. 18 Special Town Meeting, but the vote was held when Chairman Michael Sullivan asked that Town Manager Mark Haddad further clarify the issue.

McMorris said that she was felt that there had not been "a demonstrated need for improvements" to the harbor area.

McMorris' comments were met with applause from the audience, which spoke out against the plans to change a fence and widen a road.

Sullivan disagreed, citing the safety hazard of the sidewalk.

"You need to look at the big picture. And maybe that big picture is not to change anything, but it seems prudent to me to evaluate the situation."

— Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan

"You need to look at the big picture," said Sullivan. "And maybe that big picture is not to change anything, but it seems prudent to me to evaluate the situation."

And that evaluation process would be funded by the CRC free-of-charge. Several residents objected to the notion of private companies proposing projects for the public, but Sullivan is not concerned.

"I don't have a problem with them bring ideas forward," reiterated Sullivan. "We don't have to adopt them, we can modify them."

When the fire sprinkler above Mark Haddad began to leak, the issue was held and Haddad was directed to verify that what CRC director Rizzo stated in his proposal was accurate.

"Any time you deal with change, it is a very passionate, very emotional issue for a lot of folks, because change is difficult," said Rizzo. "Everybody is trying to protect what they love about the town."

The area residents who attended do not want the fence changed in any way. According to Rizzo, though, replacing the fence could qualify the project for grants that could cover a large portion of the estimated $1.3 million price tag.

Sullivan directed Haddad to research what the code is for fence (the current fence is grandfathered in) and at what point would any changes to the sidewalk require the fence to brought up to code.

"I have some work I need to do," said Haddad. "I need to get some information on grants, and verify all the information that Dean Rizzo has provided in the past and that's my job."

Lecture series tackles issues

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

"The fast growing segment of our population here in Cohasset is the 85 and older group. Primarily they are still living at home, they want to live at home, and we want to support that."

— Kathy Bryanton, CEA director

The Council on Elder Affairs is not just for senior citizens anymore.

Not that it ever was.

In its latest effort to expand services to seniors through intergenerational programming, the CEA is offering a four-lecture educational series for the children of aging parents.

"We've always tried to offer the most pertinent, current information, whether it is property, wills, trusts or medical safety," said Director Kathleen Bryanton. "We always do it in the fall and we always include other towns. Usually it happens every two years."

Previously, the speaker series was aimed at supporting older people who were caring for a sick spouse, sibling, neighbor, or friend, but more and more Bryanton saw the children of senior citizens attempting to manage care from afar.

"We live in a mobile society," said Bryanton. "We are seeing a lot of children moving out of Cohasset to other areas, while mothers and fathers remain in Cohasset."

The distance between the generations presents yet another hurdle when it comes to things like caring for a sick parent.

The series began with a lecture on Oct. 2 that addressed dealing with potential problems before a medical crisis hit. On Oct. 9, the topic was how to get involved with your parents' affairs in a non-threatening way, while Oct. 16's lecture will discuss beating the high cost of health insurance. On Oct. 23, the lecture deals with preventing elder fraud and avoiding dishonest caregivers. The speakers who will present the lectures are all experts in their fields.

All four are extremely important – not to mention touchy – subjects. But they are also extremely relevant.

"The fast growing segment of our population here in Cohasset is the 85 and older group," said Bryanton. "Primarily they are still living at home, they want to live at home, and we want to support that."

For Carol Barrett, who services as the Outreach Program Coordinator, it is important to branch out to all those involved in the care of seniors.

"The goal is not to be satisfied with the status quo, but to be constantly looking to improve our services," said Barrett.

It certainly shows.

Of the 1,650 seniors in town, 800, or almost 50 percent utilize the service. The CEA provides a newsletter, lunches on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, and a schedule of events, programs and activities to keep everybody interest. Medical appointments are made and kept through the Medical Assistance Program (MAP5) and the Medical Transportation to Boston program (MTB5).

"There is no public transportation here in Cohasset, no taxi service," said Bryanton. "When they have a medical appointment they need to go to in Boston, they call us."

What if someone just wants to get away from their regular schedule for a while? Perhaps a trip to the Pops, a turn cooking a gourmet meal, or a little bit of Tai Chi will do the trick?

The abundance of services provided are a reflection of the dedication of those who work to make it all happen.

"I became interested in gerontology when, at 55, my mother had a massive stroke," said Bryanton. "To keep my mother at home we had to find every piece of medical service ourselves. I realized that in 1976, there was no coordinator service to help out people in that situation."

Her desire was simple: "All I wanted to do was bring my mother home," said Bryanton

For Barrett, this is a "second career," but the first was not much different. She served the elderly population as a nurse then and continues to do so now.

"There was an elderly woman living by herself in town who had a niece and nephew living in Texas," said Bryanton. "Carol not only provided transportation to Boston for chemotherapy, she involved the local clergy and got the niece and nephew to come up to visit several times."

For a single woman, who never married and whose immediate family was deceased, the CEA provided a community that cut through the isolationism that could have settled in. The last three years of her life were marked by interaction with people who cared, including a relationship with family that lived half a country away.

Both Bryanton and Barrett deflected praise though, crediting a staff and a stable of volunteers that reads like a like a Cohasset List of Residents.

"What we are trying to do is to assist elders to live safely and independently in a community." Carol Barrett, Director of the Outreach Program.

It would seem that Barrett forgot to mention "happily" in the above sentence.

After all, it appears that there are more benefits to senior citizen status in Cohasset, than just discounts at the movies.

Fundraising for playground project picks up momentum

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

As it stands, the playground at the South Shore Community Center isn't much to look at.

But by as early as next summer, the children of the center's nursery school — and those residents who come to enjoy it during after-school hours — could enjoy a new park that eliminates the current flooding problem, updates the equipment and brings the park up to code.

"We are at a little over $30,000 and we need to raise $50,000," said South Shore Community Center Nursery School's playground building committee chairman Trish Hart. "We've done most of it through brick sales and other little things like the going to the farmer's market and selling things."

The new playground construction will add "a new central play structure, a new swing set, and several ride-on and imaginary toy systems."

The nursery school hopes to raise the remaining $20,000 through a silent auction to be held Oct. 19.

"We have a tremendous fundraising event on Oct. 19," said Hart. "We have $10,000 worth of silent auction items, which we hope will raise the remaining money."

The project took a major step forward when selectmen unanimously voted to enter into a revocable licensing agreement with the South Shore Community Center that offers the nursery school program for a small parcel of land that the project needs in order to create a safety buffer zone for the children.

"Last week, we secured an additional parcel of land, about 1200 square feet," said Hart. "That area will provide and additional safety buffer zone, and a nature seating area for the children, which is huge because we are kind of jammed in there right now."

The community center has been authorized to remove a half-dead pine tree, but a black walnut on the grounds will remain.

"Right now, it looks bad," said Hart of the park, mentioning flooding and freezing problems. "The equipment is falling apart, it is just time to do it."

The effort has been aided by several town residents.

"We have an extremely active group of parents as well as people around town," said Hart. "Hap Pompeo has provided all the engineering. Brendan St. John will do the masonry work, Bob Driscoll has contacted us and will help out with the contracting aspects, and Joe Sesito has offered to help with the landscaping work."

Hart also thanked her committee and her two vice chairmen.

"I have been so happy with the way things have gone," said Hart. "I have a wonderfully strong committee, especially with my vice-chairmen Kari O'Donnell and Nancy Whelan."

But the work is not done yet. There is still an auction to hold and more bricks to sell. Small bricks with engravings cost $100, large bricks cost $500.

Anyone interested in helping can contact the nursery school at 781-383-0036.

"We have a tremendous fundraising event on Oct. 19. We have $10,000 worth of silent auction items, which we hope will raise the remaining money."

Nursery school director honored

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

After 12 years of "wonderful service," Lynne Sheridan, the director of the South Shore Community Center is leaving.

In honor of her service, the parents of the SSCC's nursery school program dedicated a Star Magnolia tree and plaque as a sign of "heartfelt gratitude" for all her work.

"We all have been positively affected by you and your professionalism through our children and your wonderful staff," reads the dedication letter signed by the parents. "The tree symbolizes your values and philosophies regarding the growth and development of teaching."

Trish Hart, who serves as the Chairman of the Nursery School's playground committee thought that the ceremony was fitting of the subject.

"It was moving and touching," said Sheridan in an email. "She was truly amazing and will surely be missed."

Welcome to James Patrick McCarthy!

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

IT'S A BOY!

Let's give a great big welcome to James Patrick McCarthy, son of Sean P. and Jennifer M. McCarthy of Jackson, N.H. James was born Sept. 13, 2002 at 10:04 p.m. at Maine Medical Center in Portland, Maine. James weighted 6 lbs. 11 oz. His maternal grandparents are Victoria Murray and the late Dennis Murray of Sturbridge, Mass. and his paternal grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. Patrick A. McCarthy of Cohasset. Congratulations to all of you on this bouncing, bundle of joy!

SEMESTER IN AUSTRALIA

Jesse L. Zerendow of Cohasset, a junior at Colby College, is spending the fall semester of the 2002-2003 academic year in Australia enrolled in a course of studies at the University of Sydney. Jesse, a CHS graduate, is the daughter of Donald and Victoria Zerendow. Jesse is majoring in international studies at Colby.

NDA HONORS

Three Cohasset seniors at Notre Dame Academy were inducted into the National Honor Society last spring. They are Martha Henderson, who was elected treasurer of the National Honor Society, Laura Kondrat and Rachel McElroy. All three senior girls were inducted into the Foreign Language National Honor Society as well, with Martha serving as secretary. Rachel was elected co-president of the Latin National Honor Society. Also Laura, Rachel, and Martha auditioned and were selected into Notre Dame's a capella choir with Laura as its current president.

THANKS, GEORGE!

Congratulations to members of the Middle School football team! They played their first game of the season on Wed. and beat River School! Most likely the workout that they got on Saturday at Olympic Citco owned by George Roukounakis helped get them in shape for the game. George allowed the seventh- and eighth-grade boys to wash cars at his station as a fundraiser to benefit the team. The team would like to thank George for his support!

HAT'S OFF TO GREG

Greg Johnson of Cohasset was among 150 students in Providence College's Class of 2006, who spent their first days in Providence participating in the college's 12th annual Urban Action program. The freshmen and 26 upperclassmen leaders volunteered more than 3,000 hours of service at the Shared Harvest Community Farm in Cranston, R.I., a satellite operation of Providence's Southside Community Land Trust (SCLT). Greg worked at the community farm, an extension of the urban garden and farming projects sponsored by SCLT since 1981.Once a working farm, the 50-acre site of fields, pastures, outbuildings and a farmhouse had fallen into a state of disrepair. The students brought their energy and enthusiasm to develop about 15 acres of the farm. They cleaned buildings, cleared land, removed accumulated trash, and began to prepare the land for planting next summer. The farm will be the "incubator" for the ambitious new SCLT project designed to enable Providence's immigrant and low-to-moderate income families to pursue farming as a business opportunity. This sounds like a very worthwhile project.

Some news from Coast Guard, Trinity College that senior co-captain forward Morgan Sandell of Cohasset scored for the college's men soccer team, the Bantams. Trinity ended up losing to Coast Guard, 5-2. Joel R. Carpenter, 370 King St.; Gregory M. Donovan, 422 King St.; and Daniel P. Kinchla, 12 Hillside Drive, are all freshmen at St. Lawrence University in Canton, N.Y. Way to go guys, keep up the great work.

HURRYING IS TOPIC

On Friday Oct. 17, Bob Whitney of Hingham, a senior vice president at Trigen Boston Energy and a member of The National Speakers' Association speaks nationally to a variety of groups on motivational, leadership and spiritual topics. Bob has his own news column in the Mariners, Good Vibes, and will be addressing the topic of one of his latest columns; "Hurry, Hurry, Hurry." Why have we become too preoccupied and have settled for less as a society? Come listen and learn. Noon to 1p.m.at the South Shore Art Center, Free for more info call 781-383-0771.

Musical Mystery Dinners help Conservatory

The evening begins at 6 p.m., with a reception at South Shore Conservatory, One Conservatory Drive, Hingham, followed by dinner parties hosted by generous friends of the Conservatory.

Music, friends and food are all the right ingredients for a Saturday evening, at South Shore Conservatory's Musical Mystery Dinners on Saturday, Oct. 26.

The evening begins at 6 p.m., with a reception at South Shore Conservatory, One Conservatory Drive, Hingham, followed by dinner parties hosted by generous friends of the Conservatory. At the reception guests will enjoy cocktails, hors d'oeuvres and a performance by Hui-Min Wang of the Conservatory piano faculty. When guests arrive at the reception, the mystery of their dinner destinations is solved as guests receive their directions to one of the host homes. The Conservatory extends sincere thanks to this year's hosts, Deborah Allinson and Thomas Lamb, Margaret and Brian Curtis, Linda and Robert Goulding, Christine and Michael Puzo, Katharine and William Reardon, Jane and Vcevy Strekalovsky, and Andrea and William Young.

Proceeds from the evening, and a similar event at The Ellison Center in Duxbury, benefit educational programs and scholarships of South Shore Conservatory. Tickets at $50 per person are available in the Conservatory office, or by calling Laura Carleton at 781-934-2731, ext. 14.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Plan strikes out

The Verizon call to the bullpen. The Nextel Half-time report. The Mobil Speed Pass stolen bases leaders. In professional and college sports these days everything has a price. You want to name a field, name your figure.

It's big business today with the high player salaries and it takes big bucks to make a professional team financially successful. A winning record also helps, but it isn't apparently the driving force. Who you can get to sponsor the replays on the Jumbotron or who foots the bill for the half-time report matters.

The college scene isn't immune from the lure of the mighty dollar, either. Whatever happened to it just being the Fiesta Bowl or the Orange Bowl. Now it's the Minute Maid Orange bowl and the Tostitos Fiesta Bowl.

Commercializing our sports has become so common place. We are jaded now about it and have accepted the fate — just as we New Englanders have come to understand post-season baseball isn't in the cards for the Red Sox.

Somewhere, though, we have to draw the line when commercializing sports goes to far. And we would like to think that the buck stops in Cohasset.

Make no mistake, we applaud the Little League's ambitious efforts to secure the $150,000 to pay for the fields, but selling the naming rights or any parts of the fields are off base. We recognize the organization's desire to limit the expense to taxpayers and it has come up with ways to accomplish that goal. But at what price? Are we too naïve in thinking that Little League should still remain in its purist form and not be over-commercialized?

The league — after abandoning the idea of naming the fields to the highest bidder — has reached a compromise of sorts which would involve recognizing donors on dug-outs, bleachers and the scoreboard as "Diamond Donors." It still sounds all very commercial to us. Why can't kids just go out and play the game, parents and friends just sit in the stands without having to be confronted with what boils down to advertising.

We applaud Selectman Tom Callahan who raised the issue again last week. We happen to agree with the selectmen who as a majority believe the fields should be named as recognition to someone who stands out in the community. Someone who has dedicated his or her life to youth sports and the children of Cohasset. Someone whose family may not have the bucks to cough up.

And what's also wrong with just calling them the Little League fields for now? Why the big push, other than money, to name the fields?

We're in full support of the league, our own children participate in league sports in our communities. The league leaders are dedicated to helping foster sportsmanship and growth in youngsters. We're not against them and that's not what this is about. We just happen to think youth programs are one of the last vestiges where the sport is still in its purist form.

We hope it stays that way.

Volunteers are needed at the Cohasset Elder Affairs office.

People of any age who are interested in improving the quality of life of older people can find a wide variety of meaningful and enjoyable work by volunteering at the senior center.

The nature of work and the time commitment is flexible from answering the phones to helping in the kitchen or driving the van once a month. Sending out our the newsletters once a month.

There is a stipend for (60 years old and over) who are interested in working 15 to 20 hours in the office.

College students are welcome to help during their summer break.

Cohasset Elder Affairs is a community based program and our volunteers are our most valuable resource.

Avalon concerns

TO THE EDITOR:

I recently wrote a lengthy letter to Woody Chittick, Chairman of the Cohasset Zoning Board of Appeals outlining some of my concerns with the Avalon Bay Project currently being reviewed under the Chapter 40B Comprehensive Permit process. Woody called me personally to thank me for the letter and to reiterate that the Board is seeking public comment so that they can make a case to either deny the permit or to approve it, but with reasonable conditions. The purpose of this letter is to urge the residents of Cohasset who have any issues or concerns with the project to make them known in writing to the Zoning Board of Appeals so it can make an informed decision and have a strong basis for negotiation if needed. Below are excerpts from my letter to Woody outlining three major areas of concern, which may be shared by others in town or which may spark new thoughts and ideas.

Project size

My greatest concern is the number of units being proposed. 200/254 units increase Cohasset's population by 7-9 percent in one swoop. I think that is a lot for a town that has had moderate growth over the past years. Maybe the first phase could be a smaller amount of units to see how it really impacts the town? In addition, Avalon is predicting 2 cars per unit. Although they were confident there would be enough parking spaces in their complex, can the town accommodate 400 more cars in the Center of Town, at Sandy Beach, at the new Commuter Rail lot, at Shaws or Stop and Shop, etc.? Will Avalon Bay help fund additional parking spaces in these places? Or as an example, maybe a condition of the permit could be "one Sandy Beach sticker per family not per car".

Number of children

I am happy that the Board has requested that Avalon Bay provide it with the demographics of all 12 Apartment Complexes and that the board is concerned with how many school age children this complex will add to town. However, my concern is greater for the number of children age 0-5 this complex will bring to town, most likely by the young couples living in the two-bedroom units of which there will be 120. Avalon Bay did not include these counts in their presentation. As a parent of a 2-year-old, I am very aware of the "baby boom" in Cohasset over the past few years and the fact that the town does not have the Nursery School space to support it. Already, there is a lottery system and large wait lists at the nursery schools in Cohasset and our neighboring towns. I would like to see the Board collect data on the predicted number of children in this under-five age group and negotiate with Avalon Bay to either place a Nursery School on sight to accommodate the children living there or to make financial contributions to the Community Center, Carriage House, and Sand Castles Nursery Schools so that they may expand their facilities, faculty, and number of classes to accommodate this increase in pre-school population. To me, this does have an impact on the health, safety, and environment for my daughter who I want to be successful in the Cohasset school system if I have to ship her off to another town because there is no space for her in Cohasset or if she cannot go to preschool at all because the other towns do not have the space either.

Traffic flow

Listening to Avalon's traffic consultant, I do think they underestimated the traffic flow in the peek rush hour times. On the one hand they stated that the proposed complex would have mostly single or married couples in their early or mid-career stage of life (say 70 percent) and a smaller proportion of retirees and stay-at-home moms (say 30 percent). If this is the case, then I calculate 280 cars going off to work in the morning not 90. They also were saying that it took the Board 40 seconds to make a turn onto 3A after your Saturday tour – I believe the wait time would be a lot more during the week. I am also concerned that the driveway to Avalon Cohasset is so close to and somewhat blinded to the driveway at Fitness First. I can just see someone making a quick left onto 3A out of Avalon and running into a car waiting to go left into Fitness First.

I understand that the Avalon complex does not qualify for a traffic light installation; however, I think the town should build into the permit, if issued, a stipulation that if there are X number of accidents or if the state changes its current standards for a traffic signal, then Avalon or any future owner should be required to work with the state to install a light at its entrance onto 3A.

Moreover, Avalon predicted that the traffic on 3A would decrease once the train came because people currently going north on 3A to the commuter boat will get off to park at the Scituate stations before reaching Cohasset. I do agree with this statement in part, but once those stations become full, people will drive to Cohasset. And more importantly, Avalon did not count the increase in cars that Route 3A will experience from those commuters who live in Duxbury, Marshfield, Hanover, and Norwell that drive currently on Rte 3, but who would now take the train and drive up 3A to get to it. (If that increase doesn't happen, then the MBTA's case for having the train restored is flawed.)

Support Barnes property purchase

TO THE EDITOR:

For years Cohasset has talked about the desirability of increasing the size of Wheelwright Park. We finally have the opportunity to purchase 32 additional acres that directly abut the park and the adjoining Boy Scout retreat. The land is called the "Barnes Property". Earlier this year, a real estate developer offered the Barnes family one million dollars for the land; instead of jumping at the offer, the family consulted with the town to see if it still had an interested in the property – we do!

The town should make every possible effort to acquire this land. What makes the acquisition of this property a truly great opportunity is its proximity to Wheelwright Park (one of Cohasset's most visited areas of public open space). Most visitors will be surprised to learn that many of the most popular walking trails are not located in the park; rather, they are within the Barnes property. By way of example, most visitors will recall the pond that is located a few hundred yards inside the park. The opposite side of the pond is not part of the park; rather, that land lies within the Barnes property. Many of the popular trails that are surrounded by ancient oak trees and tall hollies are also on the Barnes property. We must act now to protect these areas from development. The town will lose this unique opportunity if we do not raise the money necessary to buy the land by the Nov. 18, 2002 Special Town Meeting.

Last week the Cohasset Conservation Trust announced a challenge grant for the purchase of the Barnes property. The Trust will match (dollar-for-dollar) all private contributions up to a total of $150,000. All money donated will be held by the Trust for this purchase. Please help us preserve one of the town's favorite rural areas by sending a tax deductible contribution to the Cohasset Conservation Trust, P.O. Box 314, Cohasset, MA 02025 – note on the check "Barnes Property". Since the Conservation Trust will match all donations, any contribution (no matter how small) will have a great impact on our ability to preserve this gem. Six hundred thousand dollars has already been raised!

Temple, not church

TO THE EDITOR:

In the Oct. 3 issue of the "Cohasset Mariner" on page 2 in an article titled "Churches to host parenting seminar" Congregation Sha'aray Shalom is referred to as a Church. Congregation Sha'aray Shalom is a Jewish House of Worship. This is a Temple or Synagogue and not a Church.

I am a member of The Second Congregational Church of Cohasset and have attended services there for more than 20 years and will continue to do so faithfully and happily. However, many years ago, when I went to college and over half the student body was Jewish I learned to distinguish between Temples (also called Synagogues) and Churches. It's a matter of respect. I am bringing this matter up to enlighten this region with knowledge which I learned in upstate New York. The purpose of this letter to the editor is to promote respect and understanding. After all, Jesus was Jewish.

LWV should host state rep debate

TO THE EDITOR:

I was surprised to read that there was no debate scheduled between Bradley and Palmer of State Representative by the Hingham League of Voters.

As a former member of the Cohasset league I am concerned that the voters won't have a chance to compare the candidates. If one of them doesn't want to debate then the empty chair should be there.

Democracy is a precious commodity and to have it stifled by mis information or the right of the people to know as much as possible of their candidates is wrong There must be a debate.

Barnes property is worth the price

COMMENTARY

SANDRA DURANT

The Friends of the Barnes Wildlife Sanctuary has launched a fund-raising drive to meet the Cohasset Conservation Trust challenge grant of $150,000. This will save 32 pristine acres adjacent to Wheelwright Park (an area everyone who has walked there has believed to be a part of Wheelwright Park) for the Town of Cohasset.

This 32-acre wildlife sanctuary is part of a very special deep forest habitat of roughly 230 acres. It is a vital organ in the Jerusalem Road-Forest Avenue core forest habitat which includes: Wheelwright Park, White Holly Hill Farm-forest, The Arthur Lehr Boy Scout retreat, Barnes Wildlife Sanctuary, Witch Hazel Swamp, the Bancroft Bird Sanctuary, and numerous other supporting habitats.

The Barnes Wildlife Sanctuary's vegetation is critical to maintaining the high quality of the town's water supply from the Sohier Street Well field zone of contribution. It has played a vital role in the development of generations of Boy Scouts. For decades adults and children alike have enjoyed its skating pond in the winter. In addition, its paths have become a well-used favorite for hikers and dog walkers. Wildlife has thrived in this precious forest habitat for thousands of years. All of this would be lost to Cohasset, its youth, and its wildlife if this property were to be developed.

Wildlife has thrived in this precious forest habitat for thousands of years. All of this would be lost to Cohasset, its youth, and its wildlife if this property were to be developed.

In the spring, the Barnes family was in the process of signing a purchase and sales agreement with a developer to build houses on this wildlife sanctuary. Members of the Community Preservation Committee (CPC) intervened and, after listening to the concerns of the family and explaining the role of Cohasset's new CPC, it became obvious that both had the same interest at heart. The Barneses wanted the land to be kept as a wildlife sanctuary but had serious reservations about the Town's willingness to raise $1,000,000. ·After being given assurance that the funds would be raised to rescue the Barnes Wildlife Sanctuary(William T. Barnes, their father, was the town's beloved Highway Surveyor who died while serving the town in 1955), the family gave their word that they would give the Town until the end of this year to buy the land. If the town failed to raise the funds, then the sanctuary would be sold to developers. In the ensuing months, while the CPC studied the land, developed funding partners and courted the town fathers, the Barnes family, under relentless pressure from developers, remained true to their word.

We now have a signed purchase and sales agreement between our Selectmen and the Barnes Family. We all owe them a very sincere debt of gratitude!

The Board of Selectman, the Cohasset Conservation Trust, the Natural Heritage & Endangered Species Program, the Trustees of Reservations and many others support the Barnes family's wish to sell their 32 acres to the Town of Cohasset rather than to developers. However, we must act quickly. To date, the Selectmen have committed $500,000 in MBTA mitigation funds, and $100,000 has been committed by the Cohasset Conservation Trust. Additionally, the Trust has challenged the community to raise $150,000 in funds that it will match dollar for dollar. With a $100,000 contribution from the CPC (pending approval at the Town Meeting), we will reach the purchase price goal of $1,000,000.

For more information, or to find out how you can volunteer contact the Friends at jeanhajjar56@hotmail.com or call Jean Hajjar at 383-9917. A map of this property showing the trails and skating pond is also available.

All tax-deductible donations should be written to "The Cohasset Conservation Trust" with a note, Barnes Wildlife Sanctuary, and sent to:

About the Cohasset Conservation Trust

By Richard Avery
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Past and ongoing articles in the Cohasset Mariner regarding the town's purchase of the Barnes property off North Main Street raise questions regarding the Cohasset Conservation Trust.

1. What constitutes the Trust?
2. Why did the Trust commit funds toward the purchase?

The Cohasset Conservation Trust was created in 1967 with the purpose of holding title to undeveloped parcels of land in Cohasset so as to maintain open space for wildlife habitat and passive recreation. In addition to about a dozen smaller parcels scattered around Cohasset, the Trust owns Bassing Beach extending from the Sailing Club out to the breakwater and beyond. Behind Town Hall are extensive walking trails in Great Brewster Woods, which is owned and maintained by the Trust. Acreage along the Gulf River near River Road is safeguarded via Trust ownership.

The Trust relies mostly on charitable donations of property from generous landowners, but receives tax-deductible monetary gifts as well. Some unrestricted property donations can be sold or swapped for purpose related parcels. One of our properties, Golden Memorial Swamp, which is southwest of North Main Street and runs from King Street to Woodside Cemetery, included a segment of the former railroad bed. In addition to money paid to the Town of Cohasset, the MBTA wrote a check to the Conservation Trust because of its "taking" of our strip for the Greenbush restoration. These funds are now being offered to the Town of Cohasset to help acquire the 32 acres constituting the Barnes property. That parcel is nestled in the "crook" of Wheelwright Park where it arcs from North Main Street to Forest Avenue. It is comprised of woods, wetlands, streams, rock outcroppings, and a skating pond – all connected by paths used daily why those who assume it is all Wheelwright Park.

The trustees of Cohasset Conservation Trust are greatly interested in preserving the status quo of the rich habitat and open space of the Barnes property. Development pressures to build on that land are great. Construction of commuter rail will intensify the drive for more homes while pushing wildlife away from their environs. This is why the Conservation Trust has committed both an outright gift of $100,000 plus a donor-matching challenge fund of $150,000 to secure a timely purchase.

We hope today's Cohasset residents will respond to this opportunity so that future generations of humans and other dwellers can benefit as we have.

Blondes extinct?

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Was it Miss Clairol, the hair coloring people, who came up with the advertising slogan: "If I have but one life; let me live it as a blonde?" Well, last week the blondes among us, the ones gentlemen prefer, weren't so sure after they got through reading and hearing about the results of the latest World Health Organization report.

It warned blondes everywhere, particularly in Scandinavia where they were invented, that due to a recessive gene they will be extinct within 200 years. In other words, they are an endangered subspecies.

I hope you realize the seriousness of such a situation.

It wasn't that long ago that a Masai chief in Kenya offered to buy Carroll Baker, the blonde who sucked her thumb in "Baby Doll," for 150 cows, 200 goats and $750 in cash. The going rate for brides in Kenya at the time was 12 cows and $200 in cash.

It was Carol Channing, the best known blonde of them all, who once said:

"When you're a blonde, people sort of lean forward when you ask them a question. They take your arm to keep you from falling into an open manhole. But when you're a brunette . . . you're just one of the bunch."

Word of the coming blonde extinction appeared first in English newspapers and even made it to CNN...

Even psychiatrists like Dr. John McGeorge, the Australian, took notice: "A woman has a much better chance than a man of being acquitted on a murder charge. If she happens to be a blonde, her chances rise about 45 per cent. Juries sometimes have to be restrained from handing them a medal for their crimes."

Word of the coming blonde extinction appeared first in English newspapers (where it was suggested that the last true blonde would be found in Finland) and even made it to CNN and the ABC news program "Good Morning America," before someone thought to call WHO.

"WHO has no knowledge of how these news reports originated," said the man from WHO, "and we would like to stress that we have no opinion of the future existence of blondes."

And that should snatch blondes back from the brink of extinction, right?

Not necessarily.

The next time you're nibbling brie and guzzling Chablis at Muffy's fundraiser for Mitt Romney in Duxbury, someone is bound to regale you with the information that the Eskimos have as many as 200 words for snow.

This bit of info got started in 1911 in a book called "Handbook of North American Indians" in which the author, Franz Boas, sought to compare the number of English words for water (liquid, lake, river, etc.) to the number of Eskimo words for snow (piqsirpoq for drifting snow, qimuqsaq for snow drift, etc.)

By 1958, it was noted as a fact in some scholarly language books and the number was set at 50 in a Broadway play, "The Fifth of July," 100 in a New York Times editorial, and 200 on a TV weather report in Cleveland.

The celebrated author, columnist and cynic H. L. Menken found that he had too much time on his hands one day in 1917 so he sat down and wrote a story entitled "A Neglected Anniversary," the 75th anniversary of the introduction of the bathtub into America.

In it, he mentioned in passing that President Millard Fillmore, who was not then or even now known for anything else, ordered the first bathtub for the White House.

By 1926, the story began to appear in reference books and quite possibly on the MCAS tests if they had them in those days. Menken was horrified and admitted the hoax for all the good it did.

Twenty-five years later, another president, Harry Truman, used to amuse visitors to the White House by recounting the story of Millard Fillmore's bathtub and as late as 1992, the Washington Times took note of it in a feature story.

So the next time the subject of blonde extinction comes up over a beer and pretzels at a fund raiser for Shannon O'Brien at the union hall, don't argue. It won't do any good.

HEALTH NOTES

Septic systems, Title 5, and house expansions

The construction at 3 Jerusalem Lane personifies, in the eyes of many in town, what can occur when an existing house is torn down and an expanded structure is constructed. This note discusses these expansions from the standpoint of wastewater disposal. Some time ago, the previous owner came before the Board of Health and received approval for an onsite wastewater treatment plant using Innovative/Advanced (so called IA) technology. The system used a commonly specified high-tech design with the addition of ultraviolet disinfection of the effluent. Moreover, the soil absorption system (leaching) was to be an experimental pilot system using a technique called drip irrigation.

The State has pilot programs for 15 of these systems throughout the state, three of which are in Cohasset. In general, they seem to operate well. They have the characteristic that generally the lawns they cover stay bright green all winter. These systems are tried when there is just not enough soil anywhere on the property to cover a system having the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) required four feet of pervious soil under the leaching area.

There is also the issue of 'manifest injustice', which the Board must consider. That is, it would be a manifest injustice to deny a permit for a system to an existing house even if there's nowhere to put a system. The Board must find a way to take care of the effluent from such a house. One solution to the problem is placing them on a "tight tank", which requires frequent regular pumping. If it were feasible, drip irrigation would be preferable. The State DEP must approve each of these special cases separately.

In the case of 3 Jerusalem Lane, the State approved an IA system with drip irrigation but required the Board to inspect the system monthly for proper operation. By a majority vote, the Chairman was therefore required to do so. All of this was done for an older house, with four bedrooms, grand fathered on the lot. This house was then torn down and the current house was erected. Upon an inspection, to determine the number of bedrooms for purposes of sizing the septic system, it was determined by the board, that the house had 10 rooms, requiring by Title 5 regulations, a five-bedroom septic system. This was discussed with the builder who elected to remove a downstairs wall combining two rooms into one, giving it nine rooms, to meet the four-bedroom requirement. The Board has previously approved such an arrangement under the manifest injustice requirement of Title 5.

However, On Friday Oct. 4, 2002 Neil Murphy the engineer, Ron White (DEP) and Joe Godzik, Town Health Officer met at the site. They agreed to have the area of the soil absorption system staked out by Murphy's surveyors. Then we will have a joint site visit with the drip irrigation representative and hand dig some holes to see what is left of soil. The drip irrigation system representative will then decide if they want to put the system in. We may or may not see new plans for the septic system. It will all depend on the results of the site visit.

Flu season

In a Sunday past, the Globe reported that the state cut Cohasset's flu vaccine allotment by 20 percent. In the article, Judy Fitzsimmons, the Town's Public Health Nurse goes on to say that this reduction will have little effect on Cohasset's program. Judy pointed out that the town will have "more than enough doses" for seniors, and others at high risk for complications from influenza. The state allocates vaccine according to a complicated formula, which seeks to get the right dosage to the right towns. Thanks to Judy, we always seem to have enough for those who really need the vaccine, but for the program to work, you need to help.

Those who should receive flu shots include anyone 50 years old or older, residents of long-term care facilities, people of any age who have chronic medical problems (heart or lung disease, asthma, diabetes, etc.), pregnant women, and people whose immune systems have been weakened (by cancer, AIDS, or other cause). People who work or live with a high-risk person should also get a flu shot so they don't spread the flu. People who just want to avoid the flu can also get the shot. A new flu shot is needed each year. The best time to get it is in the fall, but it's not too late to get it later, even after December. Flu vaccine is made from killed viruses so it cannot give you the flu. We should have enough vaccine for all who require it.

Our first clinic on Oct. 15 and 22 will only be for seniors 65 years and older and those with chronic conditions noted above. The clinic on Oct. 15 will be at the Second Congregational Church and on Oct. 22 at the Town Hall Auditorium. Both clinics will be from 10am to Noon. There will be a Town Clinic for those who are not in the above category on Saturday Nov. 2 from 10 am to noon at the Town Hall Auditorium.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Board of Health.

Cohasset history moves Into cyberspace

The Town of Cohasset announced its book, "A Narrative History of Cohasset, Volume III" (Dormitzer) is now available on amazon.com, the online superstore. The book was released in June, 2002 and immediately sold more than 1500 copies, making it one of the summer's best sellers on the South Shore.

The availability on amazon.com makes the Cohasset history book available to online buyers around the world.

"It's true, but hard to imagine that someone in Australia or Japan or England can order a copy of our history book in a few seconds", said Wig Pierson, chairman of the committee that published the book.

For those who prefer to shop in a more conventional way, the book is available in Cohasset at Buttonwood, Cards & Shards and Cohasset Hardware.

"A Narrative History of Cohasset, Volume III" (Dormitzer) covers the period from 1950 to 2000, during which the Town evolved into one of the South Shore's finest communities. The book traces the events and people that made their mark on Cohasset, ranging from the anti-war marches of the 1960s to the great train debate of the 1990s and include both scandals and the committed efforts that took place in that era. The book is 388 pages long and is packed with pictures and maps.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Support more free CRC harbor study

TO THE EDITOR:

Board of Selectmen:

I urge you to accede to Dean Rizzo's request for an expression of support for further studies by the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation of the harbor area, focusing on the walkway, fence and seawall issues. This privately funded study, at an estimated cost of $75,000, does not commit the Town but would provide vital information and conceptual choices on which the voters can make informed decisions and on which grant applications can be made.

Although we may be reluctant in the immediate future to expend taxpayers' dollars to rectify the disgraceful condition of the walkway and replace the sorry excuse for a fence, eventually civic pride surely will prompt remedial action. If such action is to be funded in large part by grant moneys, comprehensive plans must be available as a basis for grant applications as well as for voter decision.. It would be foolhardy not to take advantage of the generosity of the CRC backers, rather than let it be dissipated by a combination of lukewarm support by our elected representatives and destructive hostility by a small band of activists. Granted most citizens seem indifferent, but our representatives have a responsibility not to be indifferent, to be leaders, and to take a leading stand that best serves the Town's long-term interests

Surely our harbor can be graced with a fence that compliments its beauty, rather than be diminished by the present gimcrack excuse. Clearly, doing a decent job on the walkway will require some interference with the existing fence and thus trigger the requirement that a replacement fence meet code .Fortunately, the code can be satisfied with a fence far more attractive and far more suitable to our harbor. To argue that a safety hazard has not been demonstrated is ridiculous; we don't need statistics of small children falling through to supplement a common sense observation that it is inadequate as well as being unattractive.

Government Island has been much improved, and is now joined to Mariner Park by an interesting walkway .and is much enjoyed by townspeople and our guests. That good work should eventually be continued by attention to the rest of the waterfront., and comprehensive study is long overdue.

I urge you therefore to serve the interests of the townspeople by taking a leading position to encourage further study which is being volunteered by the Revitalization Corporation and its several dozens of financial backers.

State economists paint bleak budget picture

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

Recap and analysis of the week in state government ending Oct. 4 election-year autumns the Statehouse tends to become more scenery than stage. It's illegal to campaign inside the building, so what politicians say outside tends to get more attention than what goes on inside.

Last week proved an ironic case in point. While Shannon O'Brien and Mitt Romney garnered banner headlines and statewide TV time with dueling assurances of their management brilliance, Jane Swift was up at the State house, managing.

O'Brien and Romney's main focus in last Tuesday's debate was on who has the experience and temperament best suited to solve the problems facing the state. Meanwhile Swift, the acting governor whose lack of experience and problematic temperament cost her the chance to earn her job in her own right, described the biggest problem on government's list of challenges.

Swift's economists tell her the current budget calls for spending $350 million more than the state will collect by the time the budget year ends June 30. That imbalance is driven, the economists said, by the sad state of business here. The economic rebound won't be as robust as they thought. Businesses will sell less and earn less; unemployment will be higher than predicted, so tax revenue will drop.

It's a familiar refrain, one heard often since the recession began in 2001. Swift's response was proactive. Even though tax collections were actually a bit better than projected in September, she said she would order agency managers to eliminate $200 million in programs and services. Another $150 million in budget-balancing strategies need legislative approval, which is unlikely before the new governor is in office. By that time – January is the middle of the fiscal year – there will be less to save and less to cut.

Another sign of the damage budget problems are causing came last week. The Department of Environmental Protection said it will lay off 50 employees – the first major round of layoffs in its 26-year history. "The layoffs and budget reductions will have a direct impact on the department's ability to protect public health and the environment, impairing environmental compliance and enforcement efforts, delaying the handling of permits, and drastically reducing technical assistance provided to municipalities and community groups," the DEP told the public.

Expect more of these announcements. The administration has exhausted non-layoff personnel reduction efforts. The DEP layoffs had nothing to do with the present problem – they were forced by last summer's imbalances, the ones partially tempered with a tax increase. This budget year, it may not be possible to get a tax hike through the House. House leaders say the political appetite is not there after this year.

After Swift met last Wednesday with Senate President Thomas Birmingham and House Speaker Thomas Finneran, Birmingham was the only one who emerged saying a tax hike might be worth considering. He's also the only one who won't be at the Statehouse next year, when either Romney or O'Brien will get the chance to back up their claims of management acumen.

The struggle to lead the next era in Massachusetts politics was the story of the week.

•The role of the gender gap in the governor's race was probably solidified last week when the National Abortion Rights Action League and Planned Parenthood endorsed O'Brien. The groups said they thought O'Brien would show more leadership on protecting abortion rights; both candidates have opposed abortion rights in the past but now call themselves pro-choice.

• The National Center for Public Policy and Higher Education put out report cards for all the states ranking how well their education systems and other factors prepare young people to do well in college. Massachusetts got the highest "marks" of any state, but there was a down note: the Bay State got a D- for its programs to help kids pay for college.

• Companies that contract with the state to serve the mentally ill announced a unique voter-registration drive. They're organizing their clients to get out and vote. The rationale is simple: the people getting the services ought to have a say in electing the policy makers behind them.

CANDIDATES CORNER

Police unions back Hedlund

The Cohasset Police Association, Local 641of the International Brotherhood of Police Officers has unanimously endorsed Bob Hedlund's candidacy for re-election to the Massachusetts State Senate.

Hedlund is the first candidate for public office that has ever received an endorsement from the Cohasset Police Association Union. In their letter of endorsement, the President of Local 641, William P. Quigley, wrote, "You should know that we do not take these votes lightly."

As a member of the Criminal Justice Committee, Hedlund is proud that his strong record of working for tough, effective laws and proper public safety funding has earned him this endorsement.

"It is especially rewarding to be the first-ever candidate for public office to get an endorsement from the Cohasset Police Union," Hedlund said. "As State Senator, I've made public safety a top priority and I will continue to work hard on behalf of the hard-working men and women of the law enforcement community."

In addition to the Cohasset Police endorsement, Hedlund has been honored to receive the endorsements of the Hull Police Local, Duxbury Police Union, Hingham Police Local, State Police Association of Massachusetts, Massachusetts Correction Officers Association and Kevin Mahoney, President of the Weymouth Patrolmen's Union.

Police unions back Bradley

Garrett Bradley received the endorsement of the Hull Police Union Local #344, Cohasset Police Association Local # 641, and State Police Association of Massachusetts in his bid for re-election to the House of Representatives.

"Our Local #344 members are pleased with Rep. Bradley's unrelenting support of law enforcement officers throughout the State of Massachusetts. The law enforcement community is truly privileged to have such a devoted professional fighting for them," stated union officials Detective Coggins and Sergeant Billings.

Garrett's "continuous advocacy for measures that provide the resources to purchase public safety equipment so that State Troopers are able to perform their duties in a safe and effective manner is respectfully and greatly appreciated," stated President John Coflesky of the State Police Association of Massachusetts.

"I am truly honored to receive the endorsements of the Hull Police union, the Cohasset Police union and the State Police union," stated Bradley. "These men and women work tirelessly to protect our communities and it is a privilege to work on issues of importance to them and to the safety of our communities."

"As a former Assistant District Attorney in Plymouth County, I know the importance of supporting crime prevention programs, new crime fighting technology, and tougher sentencing guidelines," stated Bradley. "Since elected to the Legislature in 2000, I have fought for these issues which are important to all citizens. I look forward to working with these police unions and other public safety officials in the future to further improve the quality of life for our residents."

LeClair wants less talk, more action

"There is a great deal of talk that comes from Beacon Hill. Our elected officials talk about our children's education, about healthcare and about our economy," said State Senate candidate Ted LeClair, "and I believe that we need to do more than just talk about these issues. Results are what matter and that's why I am running for the State Senate"

"Where are the results on the cardiac surgery unit at South Shore Hospital? Where are the results on the battle to stop the runway at Logan airport? Where are the results to develop the Weymouth Naval Airbase? Where are the results to bring more funding to our School Building Assistance program? Where are the results to change 40B? Where are the results to change the way Beacon Hill operates? We need leadership that will fight the battle with more than talk. We need leadership that will bring results to our South Shore communities"

"I have been a small businessman on the South Shore and I understand the responsibility of delivering on my commitments. As a naval officer, who served on a destroyer in the Persian Gulf, I understand the importance of taking responsibility and being accountable for your actions."

"I want Beacon Hill to focus on people not politics," said LeClair. "Beacon Hill must be accountable and responsible to the people of the South Shore. I will be a leader that understands that results are what really matter to our communities. We need to focus on people not politics."

CLT backs Palmer

Nathaniel Palmer, Republican candidate for State Representative, wins a key endorsement from the Citizens for Limited Taxation 2-1/2 PAC, the most prominent tax reform and clean elections activists in the state.

"Taxpayers need people like Nathaniel Palmer in the State Legislature," explains executive director Chip Faulkner. "Nathaniel has signed the taxpayer protection pledge, which means he is serious about not raising taxes and will change the focus on Beacon Hill from tax hikes to better management of state revenue."

Nathaniel's experience and dedication to sound government has also earned him the endorsement of the largest organization of small business owners in Massachusetts, the National Federation of Independent Business.

Palmer is a graduate of Bentley College with a degree in Computer Information Systems, has completed post-graduate study at Babson College's Olin School of Management, and is a principal of Delphi Group, a global consulting firm headquartered in Boston. Nathaniel is a respected business advisor frequently quoted by business and technology press, and is co-author of The X-Economy (Texere, 2001) an acclaimed management text on the economic realities of the post-dotcom era.

Nathaniel was elected twice to serve consecutive terms in the Milton Housing Authority, where he held the position of Treasurer. He has also been a student mentor, peer counselor, and actively worked with high school and college students.

Senate contenders share some common ground

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

Many issues divide state Sen. Robert Hedlund, a Weymouth Republican, and Marshfield Democrat Ted LeClair, Hedlund's challenger in the Nov. 5 Plymouth-Norfolk state Senate election, but they have several things in common.

They both approach public service and the political arena with stellar intensity.

They both agree that state government is in a shambles.

They both volley barbs and backhanded compliments like they were going for the Davis Cup.

Inside the wall of the arena lies some common ground.

Both enjoy antiques. Both are sports fans.

Both are driven to be in the state Senate.

"I had a great public school education," LeClair said. "At Scituate High School, I went to Boys State. Serving the public is important to me. I believe in public service. We need people who will serve the public. There have been many missed opportunities at the Statehouse in the past 10 years, such as the failure to secure a cardiac surgery license for South Shore Hospital. We can't afford any more missed opportunities."

Hedlund is driven to seek reelection by the "disaster" in which he currently sees state government.

They both agree that state government is in a shambles.

"There are problems both with the process and respect for the taxpayer," he said. "Respect for the process of government and for the taxpayer is worse than at any time since I've been here. We need to change the way the government is operating."

One of LeClair's hobbies is studying naval history. One of his heroes is Admiral Donald Callaghan, who died in World War II. The ship LeClair served on was named after Callaghan. One of the traits LeClair admired about the Medal of Honor recipient was Callaghan's selflessness.

"I didn't make the connection between that trait and public service when I first learned about him, but I certainly do now," LeClair said.

Hedlund, who plays basketball, enjoys bike riding and is on the men's softball team, is described as the best political athlete by his friends, someone who always hit the homer that brought in his teammates.

Hedlund — who grew up in Hingham, attended Hingham Public Schools and has lived in Weymouth full-time since 1989 — collects antiques and attends local auctions. He collects some furniture and old brewery items, such as trays and signs.

LeClair is a Patriots fan and a lifelong Red Sox fan. LeClair, who later served as a lieutenant in the United States Navy, was a runner while earning his bachelor of arts degree from Villanova University, taking part in four marathons. He was also a swimmer, which prepared him well for his Navy SEAL training.

LeClair is rebuilding and renovating the antique Marshfield cape he has lived in since 1997. There are a lot of projects, big and small, involved in refurbishing the 1728 home.

State Sen. Bob Hedlund

"I'm doing most of the work on my own, bit by bit, project by project," he said.

LeClair comes by his penchant for building naturally. His father, Don LeClair, was a builder in addition to being a full-time firefighter. At times, Don LeClair worked four jobs while raising his family in Scituate.

"That is where I derived my work ethic," LeClair said.

LeClair can appreciate Hedlund's love of antiques.

Ted LeClair

"When I'm finished, he can help me decorate the house," LeClair said.

LeClair won a luncheon date with Hedlund in the silent auction at the last Weymouth Education Foundation Know-It-All-Night.

While in the Navy, LeClair was awarded the Navy Commendation Medal and the Navy Achievement Medal. Following his naval service, LeClair returned home to found the LeClair Brothers Cranberry Company in Norwell and also became part owner of Webster Cranberry, Inc.

He recently took a leave of absence as a heath care executive to address issues in the district as a candidate for the state Senate.

Hedlund, who says his blue collar roots have been helpful in his senate career, shined shoes as a child at his grandfather's Weymouth restaurant and pumped gas at the Lincoln Street Mobil Station after classes at Hingham High. He ran his own trucking business before being elected to the senate back in 1990.

Hedlund prides himself on his accomplishments for the towns in his district, including sponsoring legislation that created a Safe Drinking Water Revolving Fund which led to $10 million in savings for Mass American Water Consumers in Hingham, Hull, and North Cohasset and funding for numerous capital projects throughout the district from seawalls to roads and bridges.

Coastal Center teams up with ocean life

By Amanda Gontarz
CORRESPONDENT

A sampling of sea animals common to Cohasset was on hand to help the town's new Center for Student Coastal Research officially announce its arrival.

"We wanted to use the event to highlight what the facility is to be used for," said board member Karen Oronte, who organized the day's activities, which included a barbecue lunch and talk by a local lobsterman.

The New England Aquarium brought the sea stars and hermit crabs that children were able to pick up.

The New England Aquarium brought the sea stars and hermit crabs that children were able to pick up while aquarium workers taught them a little bit about the creatures at a special event Sept. 29.

The center, located on the harbor at 40 Parker Avenue in the Hagerty house, will aim to educate and raise awareness about the mariner and coastal ecosystems in Cohasset. Working with the local schools, the facility will provide programs that will not only teach children about the sea life, but will also benefit the town.

Jack Buckley, social studies teacher at the high school and head of the center's board, said programs designed for high school students will address specific issues affecting the town.

Elanor West, 7, shows her mother Beth Myers, a sea star at the Coastal Center open house.

Board member Paul Adams said the center will help find answers.

"Cohasset used to have an unbelievable amount of clam beds and sea life, but now so much of it is gone," he said. "We're going to work to find the causes of it, whether it was pollution or something else."

High school chemistry teacher Ann Thomae said the center is a low-cost yet effective way for the town to get tests and research done, which could later lead to receiving grants for further studies.

The programs will vary depending on the grade level of the students. Thomae said, for example, the eighth grade generally learns about weather and, therefore, the science classes will be able to use the center for that.

"It helps greatly that we have block scheduling at the high school," she said. "The 90-minute classes give us the opportunity to bring the students down to the center and work for about an hour and 15 minutes."

Whereas the high school does not a marine biology facility, those classes will take advantage of the center's capacity, Thomae said.

Summer programs will also be a big part of the center, giving students a hands-on exploration of Cohasset's coast. While the programs for high school students will focus more on in-depth study, activities for younger children will be geared more toward exposing them to the outdoors and waterways of Cohasset.

The center, which is leasing the facility from the town for a nominal fee, will feature a conference and presentation space, as well as a computer room. While the basement and first floor will belong to the center, the top two floors have been leased as studio space for the South Shore Art Center. The five-year lease will provide the center with income to maintain the building.

Some suggestions for St. Stephen's sidewalk curbing

COMMENTARY

HAM TEWKSBURY

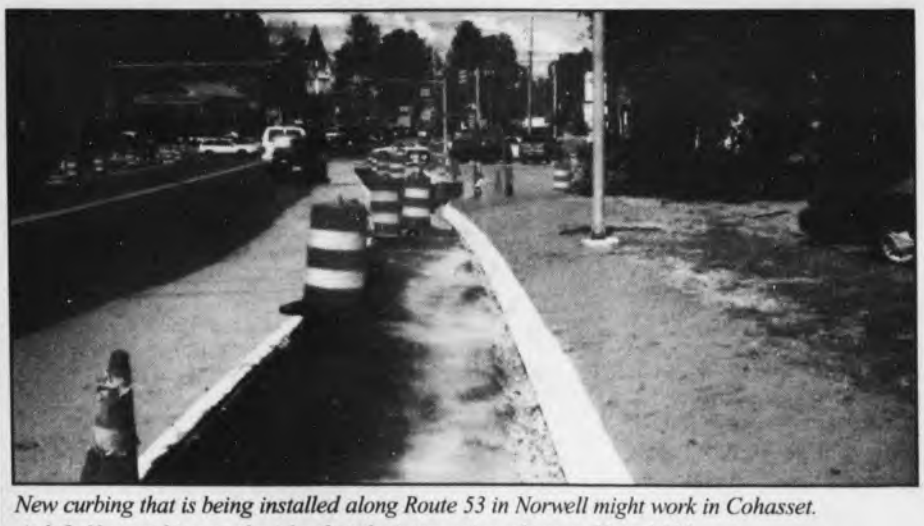
Here are pictures showing a type of curbing that would be ideal for the S. Main and Border Streets requirements.

You will see from the photos it is an angled granite curb. These shots were taken at the intersection of Routes 3 and 123 (Norwell) where the angled curbing is being installed.

When you think of the sidewalk along S. Main Street in the shadow of Episcopal Church this type of curbing would be the answer to the problem of the blending of the road into the sidewalk. None of us want motor vehicles riding/driving on the sidewalk but there are cases, such as this, where the reality of the situation overshadows the standard specifications of a road and sidewalk.

The Border Street sidewalk/road is a similar situation. This angled curb would work beautifully allowing the parked vehicle to be on the curb but not on the sidewalk. With a standard curb the parked vehicle is 4 to 8 inches away from the curb thus cutting down on the travel lanes. It's human nature not to park against the curb – we are poor judges of widths, lengths. We need, in both cases, as much travel width as we can get. This angle curbing would seem to be the answer.

Hamilton T. Tewksbury lives on Elm Street.



New curbing that is being installed along Route 53 in Norwell might work in Cohasset. At left: New curbing on the island at the intersection of routes 53 and 123.

Young Republicans urged to get involved

Calling Young Republicans! Now is the time to get involved in the political process and perform a public service by working on a campaign in a local, statewide or national race. Volunteer opportunities are ongoing through Election Day - Nov, 5 on many levels from participating in standouts, telephone banks, and fundraisers.

Please Contact the Cohasset Republican Town Committee's Scholarship Coordinators: Ray Kasperowicz (781-383-9158) or Kevin O'Donnell (781-383-0193) to offer your services.

Flu clinic is Oct. 15

There will be a Flu Clinic for Seniors (65+ yrs) and those people with chronic health problems such as cardiovascular and pulmonary disease, diabetes, renal dysfunction, HIV positive or immune compromised individuals, on Tuesday Oct. 15 from 10 am – 12 p.m. at the Second Congregational Church (next to the Town Hall).

The Flu vaccine is free but seniors are reminded to bring their Medicare insurance card or Medicare "HMO" card with them and all are asked to wear a short sleeve shirt for ease of administration. Contact the Public Health Nurse for more info at 781-383-2210.

Unicorn, Broad Cove Chorale collaboration is music to the ears

By Nathan Collins-Jensen
SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL

It seems, in our era of factory produced teen idols and eye-popping videos, a musician is anyone who dares jump, jiggle, and gyrate to a synthesized bass. Forgotten are the days where music was revered as a "concord of sweet sounds", the offender of which "is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils". Now, money is the driving force, not beauty, and the signals that once transmitted powerful emotion are lost in the static of commercialism.

Yet, some among us struggle to wade against the beating surf of fad, whim, and craze — anchored by a passion for the music itself. Two groups counted in this happy few are the South Shore's own Unicorn Singers and Broad Cove Chorale.

The Broad Cove Chorale, a group of highly accomplished female musicians, was created in 1975 by choral director Margo Euler. In 1978, Euler wished to do a staged piece titled "The Unicorn, the Gorgon, and the Manticore" by Menotti. One necessary component, though, was missing: men. As she was new to the area, Euler enlisted the help of her performers in the recruitment of male singers. Musician contacted musician to take part in the collaboration, and they were successful in acquiring enough men to perform the piece. A new group, The Unicorn Singers, was born. Today, the Unicorn Singers and the Broad Cove Chorale both combine and perform separately to create distinctive programs throughout the year.

It quickly became apparent to Euler, and to her audience, that the diverse talents of her choral members could be utilized in a very distinctive, unique fashion. She was working not only with exceptional voices, but also with actors, songwriters, arrangers, lyricists, and instrumentalists.

The Fall Gala will be held at House of Prayer in South Hingham on Oct. 19 and 20, both performances at 8 p.m. with reception to follow.

She correctly chose to expand her performances to include all of the diverse talents at her disposal and bound them together with music. The result is the eclectic versatility seen at each group's six annual concerts. Aside from straight choral singing, which is common to any choral society, these groups offer staged numbers — often in full costume. Euler conducts, choreographs, blocks, and directs these quasi-theatrical sequences.

Both the Broad Cove Chorale and the Unicorn singers perform an amazing variety of choral, opera, Broadway, instrumental, classical, madrigal, spiritual, pop, barbershop, and original parody works, among others. These seemingly disparate genres combine (many times in one driven, tightly woven concert) to form an exciting, energetic, and wonderfully entertaining spectacle.

Both groups have pooled talent from across the South Shore, and bring to their performance many (many) years of experience in music creation, direction, production, and scholarship. They pride themselves not only on their ability to reach across all genres of music, but also their desire to imprint their musicality onto those who see them perform.

There are six concert programs offered annually. The Fall Gala in October and the Winter Encore! in February feature both ensembles in the same performance. The Christmas Concerts in December (performed at five different churches, with the proceeds going to a different charity of the church's choosing) and the Spring Concerts in late April/early May feature the two choruses separately.

Fall Gala

In the upcoming Fall Gala, which was first performed in Euler's living room but has now grown to the much larger and acoustically superior House of Prayer in South Hingham, you will hear and see an eclectic mixture of Broadway, lyric opera, spiritual, madrigal, folk, and pop arrangements, including sequences from Candide and Camelot. Both the Unicorn Singers and Broad Cove Chorale will perform. Each individual talent has been highlighted and ultimately conflated to form a richly textured, controlled sound. The pieces are tight, intricate, and entertaining. Hallmarks of both groups have been variety and versatility, and this show is in no danger of becoming monotonous.

The Fall Gala will be held at House of Prayer in South Hingham on Oct. 19 and 20, both performances at 8 p.m. with reception to follow. When purchasing tickets, it is recommended that you subscribe for the season, wherein you will receive tickets for the Christmas and Spring concerts as well. The season begins with the Gala. Individual tickets become available shortly before the show dates, for a price of $25 each. For ticket information, and to be placed on their mailing list, please call the business office at 781-749-6561. You can also reach them via email through their website at www.bcc-us.com.

And the beatings go on

Cohasset gridders roll over Spellman to move to 4-0

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

For the second straight week, the Cohasset High football team dismantled a non-league foe. On Saturday, the Skippers topped the visiting Cardinal Spellman Cardinals 31-0, delighting the large Homecoming crowd at Alumni Field.

Cohasset improved to 4-0 on the season after its second shutouts in as many weeks. In fact, the Skippers have beaten their last two opponents by a combined score of 65-0 after demolishing North Quincy two weeks ago.

Cohasset dominated in every facet of the game, starting on the first play. The kickoff coverage team pinned the Cardinals back at their own 23-yard line. On their first play from scrimmage, senior cornerback Matt Davis picked off an errant long pass and ran it back into Spellman territory. Davis, a first year player for the Skippers, now has three interceptions on the year. He would later add a fumble recovery to his impressive take-away total.

Cohasset promptly took over and marched down the field with a perfectly balanced touchdown drive featuring four pass plays and four rush plays. The touchdown came on a pass from senior Mike Snowdale to junior Chris Bilodeau.

Bilodeau suffered a broken wrist in the game, an injury that required surgery earlier this week. Although his status is not certain, he will likely miss the rest of the season.

"Maybe he'll be back for the last game of the season," Cohasset coach Tony Rolfe said, "but that would be a stretch."

With Chris out of the line-up, senior John Durkin will be looked to shoulder a heavier load as a wide receiver. Durkin appears also to have the inside track to take over Bilodeau's punt return duties.

Early three goal explosion lifts Norwell boys past Cohasset

By MikeSpellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Jack Browne knew his boys were seriously pumped up last Wednesday night. He knew his talented cast of soccer players would come out buzzing, but this went beyond even his expectations.

Before the much anticipated second go-round with Cohasset last Wednesday night was even 17 minutes old, Norwell had already scored three times. The Clippers hung on for a 3-1 win, avenging an early season 2-1 loss to the Skippers.

"This was a win the kids really wanted, and it's really a big one for us," said Browne, whose team is now 6-3-2 (4-2-2 in South Shore League play). "Cohasset's a good team, like they showed us in the first game and in most of this game tonight. It's just a good thing the kids came out flying like they did, and got up quick."

It took the Clippers all of 100 seconds to get on the board. The 1-0 lead came on a textbook rush, beginning with a quick dump in from the midfield by Jason Grier that was quickly headed from 30-yards straight out by Shawn Collins to Robbie Beach streaking up the left side. Beach got a step on his mark as he raced toward the end line, freeing him for a left footed cross to Ryan Henry camped 10-yards in front for the easy re-direct back to the left past helpless Cohasset keeper Curt Kahn.

The Clippers continued to buzz all around Kahn in the opening minutes, with several good, quick passes leading to clean looks on the Cohasset keep.

The second goal wound up coming, however, on a questionable referee ruling. Coner Buick made a nice slide take-away in the top right corner of the box well ahead of Henry's attempt to reach it. However, the ball rolled up Buick's body, accidentally making contact with his hands, which were above his head. The contact was brief and seemingly inconsequential, but the official on this

Week 3- MaxLax Game Highlights & Summaries

Game of the Week:
U12 Jackals 5, Cannons, 4

Week 3 of MaxLax play ended like the ones before it, with another series of games that all qualified for the highlight reel, with another contest that was decided in OT, and some great lacrosse action throughout. This week however, the nod for Game of the Week goes to a fabulous defensive contest between these two U12 teams.

The Jackals opened up the game on a quick note, with two scores from John Fitzgerald and Ricky Boyle, but then the defense of the Cannons got into a groove and put on an impressive stand turning back numerous "sure goals" on daring checks and outstanding goaltending by Jack Murphy. The Jackals continued their relentless pressure and their persistence paid off when Fitzgerald teamed up with Connor Fallon to put them ahead by 3 goals. The Cannons aggressive defensive play paid off when a strong stick check resulted in a fast break that found Max Shipp one-on-one with the Jackals goalie and he managed to sneak one in on the back side to close the gap to 3-1 at the end of the half.

Over the first five minutes of play in the second half, the game featured back and forth action that resulted in a half a dozen chances at either end, but no goals until Boyle finally broke the ice with a nice reverse move that snuck in as a deflection to move the Jackals ahead by three. Chris Walsh proved the "never say die" attitude of the Cannons, when he scooped up a loose ball, dodged several Jackal defenders and found the Girls soccer team eyes first tourney berth of Beal era

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Just do the math.

The Cohasset girls soccer team is 4-5-1. These Lady Skippers have nine games remaining, five of them against teams they've already beaten.

Could there finally be a state tourney for Deb Beal after four frustrating seasons?

"I'd like to think so," said Beal, eyeing hard that magic .500 winning percentage needed for post-season qualification. "If we win the games we're supposed to win, we'll be in, but we've got to take care of business. I'm certainly not going to assume anything."

Who can blame her? It's been tough sledding for girls soccer at Cohasset High for most of Beal's tenure playing in the ultra-competitive South Shore League against schools that all have far larger student populations from which to draw. However, it appears the fast-improving Lady Skippers may now finally be coming into their own.

Consider this recent testimony of Norwell High coach Bruce Emerson. Emerson's perennial SSL powerhouse Norwell squad topped the Lady Skippers, 3-1, last Wednesday under the lights at Cohasset

Tale of the Tape

Cohasset 31, Cardinal Spellman 0

The Skippers improve to 4-0 with their second consecutive shutout.

On Saturday, at Alumni Field, the Skippers defense shut down Cardinal Spellman's offense all day long, and Cohasset's balanced offensive attack scored five touchdowns in route to a 31-0 Homecoming day victory.

The Skippers capitalized on several first quarter turnovers to jump out to an early 12-0 lead. Senior safety Matt Davis intercepted the first play by the Cardinals and returned it 18 yards to the Spellman 23 yard line. After several rushes by Braun Goodson, Chris Bilodeau then made two receptions during the drive, the second catch a leaping grab of a Mike Snowdale pass for the first score of the day. On the next Cardinal Spellman drive Bilodeau caused a fumble

With a jarring hit, Cohasset's offense took over, and senior halfback Braun Goodson then sprinted 54 yards untouched for his 7th touchdown of the season. The blocking of fullback Ted Straughn, and the offensive line of Dan Tarpey, Ben Lynner, Matt Casey, Steve Davis and Cosimo Cambi cleared the way for Goodson.

In the second quarter, Cohasset's defensive front of Nick Spirito, S Davis, Lynner and Sean Connolly plugged the holes, while the linebackers, Cambi, Tony Truglia, and Chris McKenna stopped the rushing attempts of Spellman. After a 15 yard punt return by Bilodeau, Goodson proceeded to twist and turn his way 57 yards to the end zone behind the downfield blocking of Cambi, which followed the initial blocks of Tom Anderson at tight end and the offensive line of Tarpey, freshman Nick Arment, Lynner, and S Davis. Cambi halted a fourth and two rushing attempt on Cardinal Spellman's next series, and Anderson then capped off the first half scoring with an acrobatic catch of a 23 yard touchdown pass from Snowdale to make the score 24-0 at the break.

Goodson recorded the fifth touchdown for the Skippers early in the fourth quarter with a 9 yard rumble up the middle, Anderson's kick made the final score 31-0.

Other offensive highlights included a 28 yard kick off return by John Durkin, and an 18 yard burst up the middle by sophomore running back Brendan Michaud behind the blocking of underclassmen, Jim DeGiacomo, Pat O'Brien, John Keniley, Matt Baroudi, Leo Clougherty and Dan McCarthy.

Coach Bob Silvia's defense has allowed one touchdown in the last thirteen quarters of play, and for the second week in a row have caused early game turnovers to enable Cohasset to capitalize and jump out to early leads.

The starting defense for the Skippers Saturday consisted of Sean Connolly and Nick Spirito at defensive ends, Ben Lynner and Stephen Davis at defensive tackles, Cosimo Cambi, Tony Truglia, and Chris McKenna at linebackers, and Tom Anderson, Matt Davis, Mike Dooley, and Chris Bilodeau in the defensive backfield. With reserve help on the line from Matt Baroudi and Matt Casey at linebacker.

Tackles: Cambi 8, McKenna, Lynner 5 each, M Davis 3, Bilodeau, Connolly, Joe Durkin, Truglia 2 each, S Davis, Spirito, Dooley, D J Silvia, and Rick Grassie 1 each.

Interceptions: M. Davis

Fumbles recovered: C Bilodeau

Passing: Snowdale was 11 for 15, for 60 yards with 2 touchdowns.

Receiving: Bilodeau 3 for 28 yards and 1 touchdown, Anderson 5 for 44 yards and 1 touchdown, Goodson 2 receptions -6 yards and John Durkin had 1 catch -6 yards.

Rushing: Goodson 17 carries for 216 yards and 3 touchdowns, Snowdale 2 for -3 yards, Straughn 1 for 5 yards, Dwayne Morris 4 for 16 yards, Michaud 3 for 18 yards, Joey Kehoe 3 for 4 yards, and Casey Coleman 1 for -3 yards.

Snowdale finished the day passing 10-of-14 with no interceptions and another touchdown strike, a 23-yarder to senior and Homecoming king Tom Anderson.

"I couldn't be any happier with Snowdale," said Rolfe. "He never makes a glaring mistake. So far, his decision-making has been superb."

The running game was as solid as it has been, with senior Braun Goodson rushing for 210 yards on only 16 carries. Goodson scored three touchdowns, including two from more than 50 yards out. Capping his day with a nine yard scoring run on the first play from scrimmage of the second half, Goodson took an early exit from the game with the outcome already set.

The Skipper defense smothered the opposing offense, shutting down both the running game and air attack completely. Seniors Ben Lynner and Cosimo Cambi led the way, both recording double-digit tackles. Cambi also had three quarterback sacks, as he and the very effective pass rush kept Spellman's quarterback under pressure all afternoon.

Game Notes

-The Cohasset defense has surrendered just 20 points, an average of five points per game.

-Cohasset picked up 18 first downs to Spellman's four.

-Senior rookie Nick Spirito has been credited with at least a half-sack in every contest this season.

-Cohasset was only flagged with one penalty, a third quarter holding call.

-Sophomore Brendan Michaud, in the game at tailback for Braun Goodson, burst through the middle for a 25 yard gain in the fourth quarter.

back of the net. Following in his footsteps, David Hernon was also able to put one on the board as a result of another outstanding defensive play that featured a leaping interception at midfield and a quick outlet pass to set up the score. The Cannons Will Wise put a nice exclamation point on their comeback efforts when he rolled left and faked a move around the net only to find an opening down low to tie the game at 4 – 4 with 3 minutes to play.

Then came the true crowd-pleaser from the Cannons goaltender Jack Murphy. The Jackals picked off a clearing pass and came down on a 3-on-1 break for what seemed like a sure goal. Undaunted, Murphy came charging out of the net to stop the play dead in its tracks by "stuffing" the charging Jackal. As the ball came loose, Fitzgerald picked it up and quickly shot the ball towards the open goal as Murphy tried to move back into position. At the last instance, the goalie jumped across the crease (ala Bobby Orr) and miraculously made the save coming down with the ball in his cross as he fell to the ground. With both sides cheering the action and the adrenaline pumping, the two teams traded spirited advances as the seconds ticked down. Finally, Boyle secured the game winner for the Jackals as time ran off the clock finishing off an impressive show.

Player of the Week: Jack Murphy - Jackals Goaltender with 14 saves

Pros swing for Jimmy Fund at Hingham's Fore Seasons

By Amanda Gontarz
CORRESPONDENT

Golf professionals from around New England will give free private lessons Saturday, Oct. 12, at Fore Seasons Golf on Whiting Street in Hingham in support of the Jimmy Fund's Golf Tipathon.

The professionals will give 15-minute lessons to people of all skill levels, from the very beginner to those who already know a few things about the sport.

> "It will be a lot of fun and it's for a great cause."
> — Joe Pustizzi, Fore Seasons Golf

Some of the professionals who will volunteer their time include Chip Johnson, the 2002 New England PGA champion who also is the head golf pro at Hatherly Golf Club in Scituate; Sandra Palmer, the first $1 million winner of the LPGA who instructs at Fore Seasons; and Tom Civichi, who was honored with the New England PGA Teacher of the Year award.

Fore Seasons' owner and operator, Joe Pustizzi, organized the fundraiser, to be held from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m., and said the event will give people a chance to receive one-on-one quality instruction from a professional golfer.

"The private lessons will allow people to practice whatever they want," he said. "It's a great time for a beginner to come out and just learn how to swing the club."

The event is free, but representatives from the Jimmy Fund will be accepting donations.

"People are under no obligation to give, but we hope most will give something," Pustizzi said.

Fore Seasons wants to raise at least $4,000, all of which will go directly to the Jimmy Fund.

"No matter how much we raise, I'll good about it and we're definitely going to do it again," Pustizzi said. "It will be a lot of fun and it's for a great cause."

While other charities were considered, Fore Seasons chose the Jimmy Fund for the event for a simple reason. "They're affiliated with Dana Faber Cancer Institute and they do great work with children," Pustizzi said.

A member of the New England PGA, Pustizzi said he plans to host the fundraiser annually, adding more charities as the event grows.

Fore Seasons has covered and heated booths, allowing the event to be held rain or shine.

For more information about the event, contact Joe Pustizzi at 741-8305.

Middle School gridders win opener

With just three seconds left on the halftime clock, Cohasset's Fletcher Smalzel hauled in a bomb from quarterback John Harrington and raced to the end zone for a 60-yard touchdown play, breaking a scoreless tie and sending the Cohasset Middle School football team into the break with a 6-0 lead over Rivers School (Weston).

Fullback Alex Hunt added a 15-yard TD scamper in the second half to help the "Little Skippers" to their season opening win last Wednesday. Nick Zappolo was on the receiving end of a Harrington pass a moment later for the 2-point conversion to close the scoring out at 14-0.

Several members of the defensive squad came up big in the shutout, including Colin Conway (four sacks) and TJ Kennedy (three tackles).

The Middle Schoolers will be back in action a week from Wednesday, Oct. 23 vs. Wixon School at Alumni Stadium (4 p.m. start).

side of the field went by the letter of the law and awarded a penalty kick.

Collins drilled the freebie off the inside of the crossbar and in to the left of the again powerless Kahn, making it 2-0 at the10:50 mark.

The real heartbreaker, and the one that really quieted the partisan home crown at Alumni Stadium, though, came less than six minutes later when Collins potted his second goal of the game off a beautiful feed from Matt Hunt.

The Norwell frontliners showed remarkable patience on this back-breaking tally, as they calmly worked the ball around the perimeter after Cohasset defenders got back to stem one of the countless strong first half rushes of the Clippers.

Henry kept his mark on his back by the top right corner, as he calmly scanned the field over his shoulders, finally spinning and booting a pass all the way to Hunt on the left wing. Hunt carried the ball into the left corner away from pressure, and served a picture-perfect cross to the streaking Collins for a quick one-timer short side on Kahn.

"For whatever reason, we just seemed to come out flat," offered Cohasset following the loss, the first for his team in South Shore League play this season. "But you've got to give Norwell credit too. They really came out with a lot of intensity. That penalty kick for a goal really hurt us, and that third goal took the wind out of our sails a little."

The host Skippers seemed to shake out of their doldrums in the latter stages of the half, finally forcing Norwell keeper Rory O'Connor to serve as something other than a glorified bystander.

And Cohasset captain Evan Pestone made the game a little more interesting, scoring on a scintillating solo effort in the 39th minute. After collecting a throw-in, Robert Hickey slid a pass into Pestone 20 yards out to the right of O'Connor. Pestone settled the bouncing ball, got his man to bite on a fake to the middle and then spun toward the sideline to quickly drill a shot that beat the Norwell keep high farside.

The majority of the second half was played near midfield, with Browne dropping several of his more talented players onto defense and his team content to simply protect the goal box. Of course , the regular backline of Grier, Matt Sammartino, Jake Cleaves and Pat Manning (at the all important sweeper position) did an outstanding job of this all on their own for much of the game.

"All of those guys really came to play today," lauded Browne. "They were all stepping up and playing aggressive. Pat Manning made great decisions about when to come up and play the ball. People just aren't getting by him."

Norwell actually seemed to have the better scoring chances in the early stages of the second half. Kahn was forced to make a couple of point blank saves on Garrett Bates to keep his team within shouting distance, and Henry fired a rebound chance just wide in the 70th minute.

The Skippers owned the final 10 minutes, however, as their midfielders and backs pinched up to support the attack. Pestone was sent in all alone on O'Connor with a nice through pass with seven minutes remaining, but the Norwell goalie charged the ball aggressively to smother the attempted shot.

A Cohasset free kick from 30-yards out inside the final five minutes resulted in a ball that bounced behind O'Connor and toward the goal line, but Bates was able to clear it away at the last instant.

"We knew they'd make that kind of run in the second half," said Browne. "Fortunately, we withstood it. Our kids played a real strong game. Hopefully, this is a win that will keep us going strong for a while."

The Skippers were no doubt feeling the loss talented center midfielder John Andrade. The junior suffered a concussion in the previous game, a 6-0 win over Hull last Monday, and coach Nigro freely admitted his team did not have the depth to make up for that kind of significant absence.

"We've got a lot of youth and inexperience right now," noted the third year Cohasset skipper. "We've got some talented younger players, but they're not ready to step in for a guy like Andrade. That would be asking a lot at this stage."

Boys soccer Notes

The Skippers bounced back with a solid effort and a win with Mashpee in town Thursday to improve to 4-1-2 in league play, but fell in non-league action to Hanover on Monday, 3-1, to fall to 5-2-4 overall.

Jesse Brewer put one home four minutes in against Mashpee on Thursday, and Pestone scored on a pass from Matt O'Connell later in the half to send the Skippers into the break with a 2-0 lead.

Mashpee scored in the second to create some anxious moments down the stretch. Kahn made eight saves in the Cohasset net, including a huge stop on a late break-in.

The Skippers were without a few key players on Monday, and the absences showed early, as the bigger and deeper Indians potted two unanswered goals in the first half.

Coner Buick helped make a game of it 10 minutes into the second half with a solo tally, and Cohasset had a couple of chances to tie the game (including a post ringer from Chris Clark) before Hanover clinched it with a late goal for the 3-1 final.

Numbers adding up for lady booters

High. The longtime coach felt it was more like an escape, however.

"We beat Cohasset twice this season, and we were very fortunate to come up with the two wins," asserted Emerson. "We see Cohasset as the most dangerous team in the league. They are skilled in everything: good defense, good foot skills. They have some trouble scoring but they are dangerous."

"We played a horrible first half against Norwell and a good second half," said Beal. "It's frustrating sometimes. We've got some good players, but we don't always put it together for one reason or another."

The frustration mounted on Friday when the Lady Skippers played what Beal felt might have been their "most complete effort" of the year against tourney bound Mashpee. The host Cohasset girls carried a 1-0 lead into the late stages, only to see the Falcons punch one home in the waning minutes to escape with a tie.

Though consistency has been an issue in general with the Cohasset girls, one player this has most certainly NOT been the case with is center-midfielder Jenn Buckley. The junior has scored better than half her team's goals this season, including each of the solo tallies against Norwell and Mashpee last week.

"Jenn has just been incredible," said Beal. "She must run four miles a game. I've been tempted to move her up to forward, but she's so important to us coming back to help on defense as well. And she never complains."

Other players the coach went out of her way to acknowledge for their play of late were junior defender Holly Gramm, senior midfielder Lindsay Grossman and senior midfielder Maura McKenney. The latter took a ball to the face against Norwell, causing a heavy nose bleed all over her uniform, but returned to the field a few minutes later wearing another shirt.

In SSL play, the Lady Skippers have Hull twice more and Harwich once, teams they easily trounced in previous meetings. There are also two non-league games left against Holbrook, who Cohasset beat 6-1 back in the first week of the season. If they win these five games, the worst they can finish is 9-9-1, just good enouhg for a tourney berth.

The other three games on the slate are against SSL rivals Abington and Carver and Patriot League powerhouses Hanover (5-2-2) and Scituate (8-4). Cohasset lost a 1-0 heartbreaker to Scituate in the season opener.

Beal is hoping her team can win more than five games and move up a few rungs on the seeding chart to avoid one of the monsters in the Div. 3 Sectionals. More than that, she seems to believe it can happen.

"I think we should be able to compete in all of those games," asserted Beal. "We just have to learn to win. Winning becomes contagious, and I'm hoping we catch it."

Great sound. Small size. No compromise.

With more than 30 years of industry-leading innovation, Bose® has created three acoustic waveguide products that are favorites of audio critics and music lovers alike. After experiencing their award-winning sound, compact size and intuitive simplicity, you'll understand why Bose is considered the most respected name in sound.

Rich sound from our top-of-the-line integrated system.

Why settle for the big and bulky components of an ordinary stereo when you can enjoy the extraordinary sound of a sleek, all-in-one music system? The Acoustic Wave® music system includes an AM/FM tuner, a CD player and something you won't find in any conventional stereo – our acoustic waveguide speaker technology. Much as a flute strengthens a breath of air to fill an entire concert hall, the waveguide produces rich, room-filling sound from a small enclosure. In fact, when we first introduced the Acoustic Wave® music system, Stereo Review said it had "possibly the best-reproduced sound many people have ever heard." Hard to believe the entire system is the size of a briefcase.

You'll hear the difference the very first time you turn on the Acoustic Wave® music system. Patented Bose technology gives your favorite CDs and radio programs a clarity and richness that will astound you. And with our credit card-sized remote, you can control this award-winning sound from the palm of your hand. With all this, it's no wonder many people use it as their primary stereo.

Even smaller systems for even smaller spaces.

Wish you had great sounding music in your bedroom or office? Try the Bose Wave® radio, with or without the built-in CD player. It utilizes a smaller version of our acoustic waveguide speaker technology to give you sparkling high notes, rich deep low notes and a clarity that's remarkable for something its size. The Oregonian said that the Wave® radio/CD "remains one of those little unexplained miracles of acoustic physics." Our original Wave® radio is designed just as impressively. Other features include dual alarms, a credit card-sized remote control and six AM and six FM station presets.

Call and make 12 interest-free payments.

Take advantage of our payment plan and make 12 interest-free monthly payments. And be sure to ask about our free shipping offer. Choose the Acoustic Wave® music system, our premium waveguide product, and we'll send you a Bose Multimedia Pedestal with inputs for your TV, VCR, DVD player and another music source – absolutely free. And no matter which waveguide product you choose, our 30-day risk-free in-home trial guarantees your satisfaction.

So let Bose put an acoustic waveguide product in front of you. And hear all that stands behind them.

Order the Acoustic Wave® system by Dec. 31, 2002 and get a FREE Pedestal – a $149.95 value.

Fall barn sale at fire museum

A fall barn sale will take place at Bare Cove Fire Museum on Saturday, Oct. 26 from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. at 19 Fort Hill St., rain or shine. Donations are gratefully accepted; please call 781-749-0028.

The Bare Cove Fire Museum has a history of supporting the cost of the non-profit museum by holding a bi-annual barn sale in a storage building in Bare Cove Park. Items for sale include skis and poles, books, records (78s and other sizes), tapes, speakers, dishes, furniture, toys, puzzles, clothes, computer games, tools, art, holiday decorations, sports equipment and household appliances. Aside from raising money on the day of the barn sale, museum members will be on hand to answer questions you may have about the history of firefighting in Hingham.

The museum's neighbor, the South Shore Model Railroad Club is having an open house the same day. Everyone is welcome to both venues!

Dance at The Garage

There will be a dance at The Garage on Friday, Oct. 18 from 7-10 p.m. Everyone in grades six-and-up is welcome. There will be a door charge of $5 per person. Snacks and refreshments will be sold as well.

Halloween fair

Pumpkins and cornstalks are appearing at local farm stands. Orange and black decorations are showing up in stores and plans are being conjured up for the South Shore Community Center Nursery School's annual Halloween Fair.

This year's fair will take place on Cohasset Common on Oct. 27, from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. a South Shore tradition for more than 30 years, the fair offers Halloween fun for the entire family. Spooks and cartoon characters of all shapes, sizes and ages are encouraged to begin preparing to join in the howlish fun.

For more information about the fair or the programs of the South Shore Nursery School, contact the Nursery School at 781-383-0036.

Historical Society lectures noted

• Thursday Oct. 17: Betsy Friedberg, National Register Director of the Massachusetts Historical Commission, will speak about what the National Register program is (and what it is not), why it is a useful program, and what sorts of resources qualify for listing. She will present examples (with slides) of the kinds of stories that historic resources can tell about our past. Lightkeepers' residence 7:30 p.m.

• Wednesday Oct. 30: Jerusalem Road Revisited "The most prominent feature of the town, that by which we are most widely known in the world, as Jerusalem Road, along which so many delightful summer homes have been built overlooking the sea." So E. Victor Bigelow wrote over a century ago in his "Narrative History of Cohasset, Massachusetts."

This remains as true today as it was when written in the 1890s. The Victorian mansions of Jerusalem Road will be featured in a slide presentation by David Wadsworth, the Society's Historian. Lightkeepers' residence, 7:30 p.m. Both events are free, light refreshments will be served.

Speaker series

On Friday, Oct. 18, Bob Whitney of Hingham, a senior vice president at Trigen Boston Energy and a member of The National Speakers' Association speaks nationally to a variety of groups on motivational, leadership and spiritual topics. Bob has his own news column in the Mariners, Good Vibes, and will be addressing the topic of one of his latest columns; "Hurry, Hurry, Hurry." Why have we become too preoccupied and have settled for less as a society? Come listen and learn from noon to 1 p.m. at the South Shore Art Center. For more information call 781-383-0771.

Hingham Cemetery foliage tour Oct. 13

The last walking tour of the season at historic Hingham Cemetery will be held Sunday, Oct. 13, at 1 p.m. and will highlight the cemetery's fall foliage and recent monument restoration. The cemetery's 150-year-old arboretum consists of several hundred specimen trees, both native and "exotic." The alees of sugar maples are expected to be at their height of color around this time.

Cemetery Director Lucinda Day will lead the tour, which includes the history of the cemetery dating from 1672, important cemetery monuments and notable burials, as well as social commentary.

The free tour will last about 1-1/2 hours and is open the public. Those interested should meet at 1 p.m. at the Hingham Bell Tower (next to Old Ship Church). Rain date is the following Sunday, Oct. 20. For further information, call 781-749-4868.

Hingham Symphony announces new season

The 2002-2003 symphony season begins in October, and Hingham Symphony has announced an eighth-month program that brings classical music to audiences on the South Shore. With the continuing leadership of Music Director Jin Kim, the HSO has developed an orchestra composed of more than 50 of graduate student and professional musicians from the conservatories in Boston, as well as a number of local professionals.

The opening concert of the season will take place on Saturday, Oct. 19 at 8 p.m. at Sanborn Auditorium in the Hingham Town Hall. On the program are Dvorak's festive Carnival Overture, Ginastera's Variaciones Concertantes, and Brahm's passionate Symphony No. 3. Jin Kim will give a pre-concert explanation of the program at 7:15 p.m. All are invited to meet the musicians at a reception after the concert. On Oct. 18, HSO will perform the same program as a benefit concert for South Shore Hospital.

HSO performs 10 full-orchestra concerts and a chamber recital each season. In addition, members of the HSO bring a KidsConcert into elementary schools as requested. An active group of volunteers, called Fanfare, helps the Board and staff manage logistics of the season.

The HSO, as a non-profit organization, relies on contributions of all kinds from people across the South Shore, and will work closely with businesses to develop mutually beneficial relationships. For more information, to receive a brochure, or to buy tickets, please call the HSO at 781-740-5694.

Musical Mystery Dinners help Conservatory

Music, friends and food are all the right ingredients for a Saturday evening, at South Shore Conservatory's Musical Mystery Dinners on Saturday, Oct. 26.

The evening begins at 6 p.m., with a reception at South Shore Conservatory, One Conservatory Drive, Hingham, followed by dinner parties hosted by generous friends of the Conservatory. At the reception guests will enjoy cocktails, hors d'oeuvres and a performance by Hui-Min Wang of the Conservatory piano faculty. When guests arrive at the reception, the mystery of their dinner destinations is solved as guests receive their directions to one of the host homes. The Conservatory extends sincere thanks to this year's hosts, Deborah Allinson and Thomas Lamb, Margaret and Brian Curtis, Linda and Robert Goulding, Christine and Michael Puzo, Katharine and William Reardon, Jane and Vcevy Strekalovsky, and Andrea and William Young.

Proceeds from the evening, and a similar event at The Ellison Center in Duxbury, benefit educational programs and scholarships of South Shore Conservatory. Tickets at $50 per person are available in the Conservatory office, or by calling Laura Carleton at 781-934-2731, ext. 14.

Dolan featured at Staircase Gallery

"The beauty of nature, quiet moments in favorite places, and the wish for time to stand still," explains Hingham artist Dianne Smith Dolan whose paintings are featured in South Shore Conservatory's Staircase Gallery through the end of October. "These are the ideas the paintings explore."

Colorful and expressive, Dolan's exhibit is a combination of watercolor paintings and oil paintings. "While they have their origins in actual places, they are more about memories that change over time. That instant briefly captured in the mind and stored away to be revisited time and time again."

Currently teaching in the Foxborough Public Schools, Dolan is an active member of the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset.

Dolan received an MS degree in Art Education from Central Connecticut State University in New Britain, Conn., and a BFA degree from Hartford Art School at the University of Hartford. She also attended Maryland Institute College of Art in Baltimore, Md.

Admission to the Staircase Gallery is free. Gallery hours are Monday through Friday, 9 am – 5 pm, and Saturday, 9 am to noon. The Staircase Gallery is a partnership between South Shore Conservatory and South Shore Art Center in Cohasset. South Shore Conservatory is located at One Conservatory Drive in Hingham. For more information, call 781-749-7565, ext. 16.

South Shore Conservatory's Staircase Gallery will be replaced by professional gallery space as part of a $3.5 million capital campaign to renovate the existing Hingham campus building and build an addition. Groundbreaking is scheduled for early 2003. Please call 781-749-7565, ext. 23 for more information on the campaign.

Wine, dinner series

Tosca in Hingham, will offer guests a chance to learn the secrets of pairing wine with a meal at Tosca's ninth Annual Wine Dinner series.

The series, which will kick-off on Oct. 28 and continue through Feb. 3, features a line-up of four events that combine the cuisine of Executive Chef Kevin Long with wines from around the world.

"Selecting a wine to complement a meal is a key part of the dining experience," says Long. "Choosing the right wine enhances the taste of the food and allows diners to appreciate their meal on a different level. Our Wine Dinner Series will educate our guests on the wine selection process."

The dinners will showcase signature Tosca creations paired with Bedford International Wine Company on Oct. 28; the wines of Destino Vineyards on Dec. 9; Beringer Vineyards on Jan. 13; and DeLoach Vineyards, concluding the series on Feb. 3. Each of the Wine Dinners begins at 7 p.m.

Admission to each of the wine dinner series events is $75, and the combined cost to attend any three events is $200. For more information on the wine dinner series, please call Tosca at (781) 740-0080.

Family Fun Day at Weir River Farm

The Trustees of Reservations invite families to explore Weir River Farm in Hingham during the second annual Family Fun Day on Saturday, Oct. 12, from noon-3p.m. Kids can meet Liberty the llama, Sebastian the pig, and dozens of other barn yard animals. Pony rides and face painting will be offered, and everyone can compete in pie-eating contests and old-time games, such as sack races.

In addition to the games and food, the day will feature barnyard tours, hands-on crafts, and a demonstration of equine massage. "The Gathering" will provide bluegrass music throughout the afternoon. Refreshments will include hot dogs, cider, and cookies.

"Fall is a beautiful time of year on the South Shore," explains Trustees Superintendent Jim Freeborn, "and we thought people would like a chance to explore Weir River Farm and celebrate the season."

He explains that The Trustees of Reservations has preserved the former country estate for visitors to enjoy. In addition to the planned events, Freeborn says visitors will find acres of rolling fields, stables, a magnificent barn and views of Boston Harbor and the North Shore. Trails lead throughout the property, which is connected to more than 800 acres of nearby land that The Trustees has preserved for public enjoyment and wildlife protection.

"Fall is a beautiful time of year on the South Shore and we thought people would like a chance to explore Weir River Farm and celebrate the season."
— Trustees Superintendent Jim Freeborn

"Even though we're close to Boston, I've seen everything from red-tailed hawks to wild turkeys and fox on the farm and in the nearby woods," says Freeborn, who lives on the farm year round.

While they're hoping for many first-time visitors, parents might know Weir River Farm through its educational programs, says Education and Interpretation Coordinator Tara Nieves. She's in charge of designing outdoor programs for local schools. Throughout the year, kids of all ages learn about ecology, wildlife, and natural history on the farm through a variety of programs.

Several local businesses have banded together to support the event. Morning Glories Bakery will provide pies for the pie-eating contest, Penniman Hill Farm is providing festive fall decorations, and The Gathering is providing their talents for free.

A llama and all the other barnyard animals at Weir River Farm will be on hand to welcome visitors during Family Fun Day.

Parking for the event is in the lot at the end of Turkey Hill Lane in Hingham. A hayride will ferry visitors to the farm, located at the base of Turkey Hill.

A $5 admission fee for non-members will help support the farm and its educational programs. Join The Trustees at the event and you'll be eligible to receive a $2 member discount per person. Rain cancels the event, call 781/740-7233 if you are concerned about the weather.

Help while on the 'Road to Recovery'

More volunteers are always needed

By Mary Jane Hanron
CORRESPONDENT

Volunteerism is thriving as demonstrated by the works of the South Shore unit of "Road to Recovery". This program, offering transportation to cancer patients to and from medical appointments, provides a needed service to many residents of seven towns south of Boston, ranging from Milton to Marshfield.

Laurie Berlinguet, resident of Hingham and co-coordinator of the local program headquartered at Hersey House, speaks enthusiastically of the accomplishments of the people who give their time to neighbors in need.

The program, affiliated with the American Cancer Society, began 30 years ago in Hingham.

Twelve volunteers staff the office Monday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. During this time, phone requests are taken for rides to and from various facilities. These appointments are then coordinated with the availability of volunteer drivers. Destinations range from local doctors' offices to the large hospitals in Boston. Assisting Berlinguet with the daily operations as co-coordinator is Shelly Donze of Cohasset.

The program, affiliated with the American Cancer Society, began right here in Hingham, according to Berlinguet, herself a cancer survivor. Former Hingham residents, Lillian and John Valorz, started the service in 1972 by driving friends to radiation or chemotherapy appointments. Their work expanded as they spread the word about the benefits of this service, and recruited friends to assist them. The Road to Recovery has since become a nationwide offering. Locally, the program is celebrating its 30th anniversary.

The Hingham Unit, alone, provides approximately800 rides per year to those in participating towns.

The pool of drivers is diverse, including working professionals, homemakers, retired people and cancer survivors. Some make regular trips to the Boston medical centers, while others prefer to transport people to facilities on the South Shore.

To be a driver, the only requirements are a driver's license, a car and a desire to support neighbors in need.

Scituate resident George Kelly, real estate broker and owner of Kelly and Sons, has been providing rides for approximately 20 years. Kelly, also a cancer survivor, makes many of the trips to Boston, as he is familiar with city streets, and the locations of the many renowned hospitals.

"It's very hard for most families to have someone available every day for six weeks, or regularly for several months to help a relative get to chemotherapy or radiation sessions," he says. "It's important to feel that you are helping someone."

He pointed out that each patient's situation is unique. Some individuals form an immediate bond with the driver, and share the story of their battle with cancer. Others are tired and quiet during the ride and use the time to rest and relax.

Helen Stoltz of Hull, a cancer patient and recipient of the rides, expressed her gratitude for the service. She praised the volunteers, saying that the program was the "best thing" she "ever ran into. I'll soon be roller-blading up and down Nantasket Avenue!" she proclaimed, exhibiting the hope and optimism with which cancer patients are often blessed. Although she has family members supporting her, they are often unable to accompany her to appointments due to their work schedules. Many drivers have assisted her and she has been "glad for the kindness of each one".

Berlinguet spoke of the recognition program held each year to honor those who have donated their time to assist cancer patients. A tea is held at the Lighthouse Keeper's Cottage in Cohasset to acknowledge the dedicated volunteers. Plans are in progress for a special event to be held in the spring of 2003, celebrating the 30th anniversary of the organization. It is hoped that community leaders, guest speakers and supporters will be present to commemorate this milestone and honor the participants.

Berlinguet said her greatest motivation is her wish that "people not feel alone at such a devastating time of their lives. Knowing someone is there to call and to help can make all the difference."

A need for more volunteers remains, despite the success of the service. As the numbers and needs of cancer patients increase, continued growth of the program is essential. If you can contribute time each month by driving, or assisting with phone coverage, your participation is welcomed. If you are an ambulatory cancer patient, or know of one in need of the services described, please make your situation known. To volunteer or request transportation, please call (781)749-2535.

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO DES DAUGHTERS
Time may be running out on your claim for compensation.
Recent studies emanating from the National Institutes of Health (NIH) and leading medical centers have reported a significantly higher incidence of infertility, miscarriages, ectopic pregnancies and preterm delivery as a result of in utero exposure to DES (Stilbestrol-Diethylstilbestrol), a synthetic hormone given to pregnant women in the 1950s and 1960s. Even though many years have gone by, you may still have a claim for significant compensation if you act quickly. Medical records are being destroyed and the physicians and pharmacists involved are becoming difficult to locate. Additionally, state statutes of limitations may bar a claim if not pursued diligently. Our firm specializes in DES litigation. We have successfully represented hundreds of DES victims during the past 20 years. We can obtain your medical records, have our in-house medical professionals evaluate them and, if your claim is meritorious, we will prosecute on your behalf on a contingency basis.

Banjo clock talk is in tune with history

By: Constance Gorfinkle
SPECIAL TO THE HINGHAM JOURNAL

Ever since someone realized it was possible to tell the passage of time from the movement of a shadow cast by a stick stuck in the ground, mail has been fascinated with timepieces.

Paul J. Foley is no exception. Retired for some time from his job working for the Department of Justice, Foley's hobby for the past 30 years has been studying clocks, in particular docks deigned and built by Roxbury clockmaker Simon Willard in the early 19th century. Referred to as the banjo clock because of as distinctive shape, these wall timepieces interested Foley at the outset because of their mechanical simplicity and efficiency and the fact "that they were well-made and hand-made," said Foley during a phone interview from his home in Norwell.

"Later, I got interested in their connection to local history."

Having published this past May a book on the subject, "Willard's Patent Time Pieces," which is sold over the Internet at roxburyvillagepublishing .com, Foley will discuss the topic on Oct. 24, at Old Derby Academy in Hingham, as guest of the Hingham Historical Society.

Willard, originally a builder of tall clocks, developed a wall version - as did many other clockmakers of the late 1700s - simply because they would be less expensive to make and sell, especially to a buyer who was loathe to pay between $60 and $75, which "in those days was a lot," says Foley.

So fine was Willard's version of these wall clocks that he was awarded a patent for it in 1802.

Willard, one of a family of clockmakers from Grafton, where their homestead has been turned into a museum, eventually, with his brothers - also clockmakers - set up shop in what was then known as Roxbury Village, an area that today is Dudley Square. It was there he invented and made the banjo clock, which, apparently, Willard determined, would be as beautiful as it was practical.

"They're lovely, decorative objects," says Foley, "with first-class paintings on them," applied on the inside of the pieces of glass that cover the throat and the pendulum box.

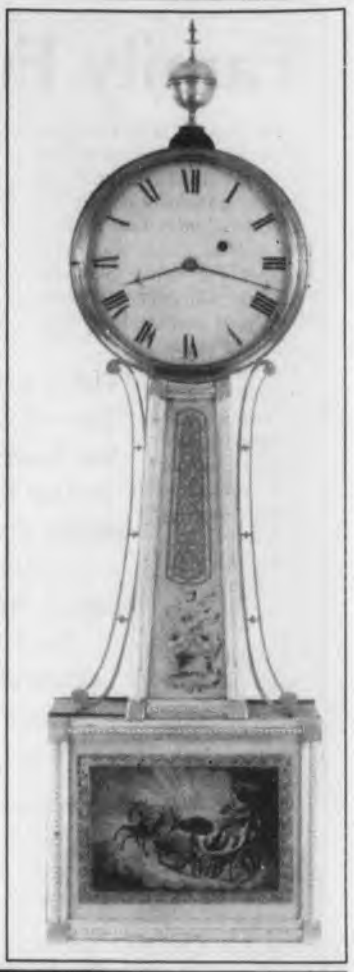
At first, the paintings were merely geometric patterns. But, later, they became pictorial with themes carried out on all the painted surfaces, says Foley. Those themes might be mythological or historical, such as depictions of scenes from the War of 1812.

Today, Willard's clocks cost considerably more than $60 or $75. Though, the average price of one runs between $3,000 and $5,000, a very early banjo clock in pristine condition can fetch as much as $50,000, says Foley.

While his Oct. 24 talk - accompanied by slides - will focus on Willard, Foley says he also will discuss a couple of Hingham clockmakers - Joshua Wilder and Rueben Tower.

Admission to Foley's presentation at Old Derby Academy, 34 Main St., is $10 in advance (paid by Oct. 15) and $12 at the door, if seating available.

To purchase tickets, send a check for the number needed (payable to the Society) to the Hingham Historical Society, P.O. Box 434, Hingham, MA 02043. Reservations will be held at the door. For more information, call 781-749-0144.



At right: The history of the banjo clock is the subject of a talk Oct. 24 at Old Derby in Hingham Square.

Hingham Symphony announces new season

The 2002-2003 symphony season begins in October, and Hingham Symphony has announced an eighth-month program that brings classical music to audiences on the South Shore. With the continuing leadership of Music Director Jin Kim, the HSO has developed an orchestra composed of more than 50 of graduate student and professional musicians from the conservatories in Boston, as well as a number of local professionals.

The opening concert of the season will take place on Saturday, Oct. 19 at 8 p.m. at Sanborn Auditorium in the Hingham Town Hall. On the program are Dvorak's festive Carnival Overture, Ginastera's Variaciones Concertantes, and Brahm's passionate Symphony No. 3. Jin Kim will give a pre-concert explanation of the program at 7:15 p.m. All are invited to meet the musicians at a reception after the concert. On Oct. 18, HSO will perform the same program as a benefit concert for South Shore Hospital.

For more information, to receive a brochure, or to buy tickets, please call the HSO at 781-740-5694.

LISTEN To Life

by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

DO YOU FEEL CUT-OFF?

Hearing problems affect roughly one-third of Americans between the ages of 65 and 74, and half of those over the age of 85. It is a sad irony that these are the ages at which the elderly begin to increasingly rely on hearing-intensive activities (such as cards) for their social interaction. Without the help of a hearing instrument, older individuals with hearing impairments are likely to withdraw from conversations and social situations in order to avoid the frustration of not being able to decipher spoken words. As a result, they may be overcome with feelings of depression and exclusion. This makes a hearing instrument a valuable component of life's enjoyment for many of the elderly.

It is certainly better to adjust to wearing a hearing instrument than to remain trapped in a world of little or no communication. Diagnosis of a hearing impairment and decisions about the best kind of instrument for individual needs are best left to the skilled, specially trained hearing instrument specialist like you'll find here at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER. Has it been some time since you last heard the sounds of life crisply and clearly? Why not stop by for a free, painless yet accurate hearing evaluation at 80 North Avenue, Rt. 139, North Medical Building, Abington or call us at 781-878-9723 for an appointment. We accept most HMOs, State GIC, Union Benefits and Mass Health.

P.S. When the spouse of a hearing-impaired individual begins to accuse him or her of "selective hearing," it can have a detrimental effect on the relationship.

OBITUARIES

Joan M. Larrabee

Joan M. (Cunningham) Larrabee, 64, of Cohasset, a retired secretary, died Sept. 19, 2002 at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth.

Mrs. Larrabee worked in the accounting department of the former New England Telephone Co. from 1955 to 1971. She was also a recess teacher at Deerhill and a secretary at Queen Anne Nursing Home from 1996-2000.

Mrs. Larrabee was a member of St. Anthony's Church and taught Confraternity of Christine Doctrine classes.

Born and raised in Mattapan, she lived in Cohasset for 31 years.

She attended St. Angela's School in Mattapan and was a 1955 graduate of St. Joseph's Academy in Brighton.

She leaves her husband, Joseph G. Larrabee, her two daughters, Joanna M. Larrabee and Julie Ann Larrabee of Cohasset; and her sister, Arleen Cunningham of Mattapan.

A funeral Mass was celebrated Sept. 23 at St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset. Interment was in Woodside Cemetery in Cohasset.

Funeral arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home of Cohasset.

Donations may be made to Crohn's & Colitis Foundation of America, 386 Park Ave. South, New York, N.Y. 10016.

Charles F. Pape

Charles F. Pape, 86, of Cohasset, a retired businessman, died Oct. 2, 2002, at Life Care Center of the South Shore after a brief illness.

He was the proprietor of Pape's Auto Repair Shop for many years. Prior to that, he owned Pape's Dairy Farm in Cohasset.

He was a member of Konohasset Lodge and a Mason for 45 years.

He was born and educated in Cohasset.

He enjoyed golfing and often played at Dennis Pines Country Club in Dennis and Pembroke Country Club.

Husband of the late Maria (Laugellé) Pape, he leaves a daughter, Susan E. Basteri of West Wareham; two sisters, Ruth S. Hussey of Abington and Elizabeth Carpenter of Downey, Calif,; two grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

A memorial service and interment held in Woodside Cemetery, Cohasset, were private.

Arrangements were handled by McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

Donations may be made to Hospice of the South Shore, P.O. Box 9060, Braintree, 02184.

John E. Woods

John E. Woods, 70, of Port Charlotte, Fla., died Sept. 30, 2002.

Mr. Woods was born in Boston, the son of the late John E. and Eleanore (O'Donoughue) Woods.

He lived most of his life in Cohasset and raised his family there. He graduated from Tabor Academy, and attended Massachusetts Maritime Academy. He served his country in the U.S. Navy. He went on to earn a Masters License U.S. Merchant Marine; retiring from Moran Towing and Transportation Company New York and Miami. He was a member of the American Legion Post 110; Destroyer Escort Association of SW Fl; Propeller Club of the United States Port of Boston.

Spiritual parenting seminar offered

St. John's Episcopal Church, along with the First Church of Christ Scientist, Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, and other area houses of worship, invite you to attend a seminar titled "10 Principles for Spiritual Parenting" to be held Wednesday, Oct. 23 from 7 to 9 p.m. at St. John's church, 172 Main St., Hingham. The talk will be followed by a book signing and refreshments. The event is free and open to the general public.

"World events have prompted families to search for new ways to become closer to one another and new ways to incorporate a sense of spirituality into their lives," says the Rev. Robert Edson, rector of St. John's. "We are delighted to join with other churches in the area to help all families explore this vital aspect of raising children."

The program will be presented by Mimi Doe, M.Ed., the author of 10 Principles for Spiritual Parenting: Nurturing Your Child's Soul, which won the 1998 Parents' Choice Seal of Approval and was a finalist in the Books for a Better Life Award. Her latest book is Busy, But Balanced: Practical and Inspirational Ways to Create a Calmer, Closer Family.

A slice of Hingham

New book pays tribute to famed decoy carver Joseph Lincoln

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Hingham is a town that's rich with history, in ways that a lot of people don't know about," said Cap Vinal from his Hingham business office.

"Slowly in recent years though, some people have begun taking a more in-depth look at the smaller parts of the whole."

Vinal is discussing his own motivation to take a more in-depth look at a smaller part of the whole, carving out a distinctive slice of Hingham's history as well as his own lifelong passions for duck hunting and antique decoy collecting. He's carried out this pursuit by authoring a newly published hardcover book in tribute to Joseph W. Lincoln, an acknowledged master of the art of wooden decoy bird carving who lived and worked in Hingham in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

Decoy carving, firmly rooted on the South Shore, is recognized as one of only two indigenous American art forms, along with whaling scrimshaw from Nantucket. Vinal's book, titled simply "Joseph W. Lincoln, Accord, Massachusetts, 1/26/1859 - 2/16/1938," is an attractive, glossy coffee table volume with minimal text presented in easy-to-read, large-print format.

It's also well-stocked with more than 60 vintage black-and-white photographs and 90 color plates of Lincoln's decoy works that really bring the carver's rustic, Yankee world of a century ago to life.

"It was difficult at times to gather information about Lincoln when I was putting the book together. The world of Hingham-Accord in his time seems so long gone now."
Author Cap Vinal

Vinal is a Hingham native now living in Duxbury. He began decoy collecting as a logical outgrowth of the duck hunting introduced to him by a childhood friend as well as his father, "Commander" Lyons. The nature of duck hunting as well as decoy collecting, involving often intense study of the forms and effects, naturally attracted the author to the work of Lincoln and a long-term desire to seek out often hard to come by information about the master carver.

Mount Blue Executive Chef Larry Weigel turns up the heat on an entree in the restaurant's kitchen. Executive chef Larry Weigel has something cooking at Mount Blue. He's hoping a good dose of charity, a dash of celebrity, and a heaping of Mount Blue food will be the right ingredients to attract a crowd at a benefit on Monday, Oct. 14.

Timber Creek, the beneficiary of this latest soiree, is a little known charity in a small town in Central Iowa. And Weigel is counting on South Shore residents coming to the table, despite the fact that the culinary event supports an out-of-town charity.

"What can get done at Timber Creek is so much bigger than this event. But I knew I had to do something and that's where this comes in."
Mount Blue Executive Chef Larry Weigel

"If it's a good charity, does it matter where it is?" asked the confident chef about the charity where he says he has seen miracles performed. "I don't see location as being an issue. If a charity is worthwhile people will respond."

Weigel is so passionate about Timber Creek — a 225-acre ranch specializing in equine assisted and aquatic therapy for adults and children with such illnesses as autism, MS, brain injuries, to name a few — that he's stepping out of his normal role in the kitchen at Mount Blue to make this event happen.

But he isn't doing it alone.

He's recruited one of the South Shore's hottest celebrities, Jeff Corwin of Animal Planet TV fame and a Marshfield resident, to host the Company Theatre production opens Oct. 11

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

It's been more than a dozen years since "Steel Magnolias" went from off-Broadway to the silver screen. The story of the laughter and tears shared by six Southern women who congregate at a beauty salon still resonates today, however, according to Lisa Rafferty, director of the current Company Theatre production of the Robert Harling play.

"Good material is eternal. The beauty of this piece is that it captures a slice of life perfectly, and with genuine humanity," explained Rafferty by telephone last week from her Scituate home. "The play reminds us that the warmth of our friends can sustain us even during the worst of times."

First produced in New York in 1987, "Steel Magnolias" concerns a close-knit circle of women who frequent Truvy's Beauty Salon in Chinquapin, Louisiana. The women — whose never seen men are either absent, depressed or dead — are more interested in gossip than a wash and set.

A national tour — top-lined by Barbara Rush, Marion Ross and Carole Cook — played Boston's Wilbur Theatre in October 1989. Later that year, a feature film version was released with a cast that

Four star boiled dinner

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Boiled dinner sounds like something you would eat as a last resort, when all you have in the house is a tough piece of meat and some old vegetables. The French don't see it that way, they often make "pot au feu," and it isn't viewed as a second-class dish. The notion is simple. Take tough cuts of beef (some recipes also include chicken, sausage, etc.) and vegetables and simmer them in water. This produces a first-class broth (which the French serve as a first course) plus tender meat and flavorful veggies. The problem with this recipe is choosing the right meat and vegetables and coordinating the cooking times.

Let's start with the key cooking principle here. Simmering meat in water is a terrific way to cook tough cuts. In a test at Cook's Illustrated, we found that roasting never gets the meat hot enough to become fork tender (air is a lousy heat conductor) and that boiling meat is just as good as braising it (cooking in a covered dish with a small amount of liquid). There is a simple bit of physics at work here. Tough cuts of beef must reach and maintain an internal temperature of over 200 degrees in order for the collagen to break down which results in fork tender meat. So boiling can be a very good thing indeed.

Okay, now for the cuts of beef. I tested chuck roasts, short ribs, beef shank, veal shank, oxtail, pork ribs, ham hock, lamb shank, chicken, and sausage. Anything with bones increased the flavor of the broth, the chuck roast was nice for slicing, but the chicken and sausage added nothing to the broth. So the winners were a chuck roast combined with beef or veal shanks.

I was using 3 quarts of water (too much water produces a weak broth) and I had found that simmering the meat the day before, chilling the broth, and then removing the solid fat that rose to the surface was the easiest method of defatting the liquid, a crucial step. As for the vegetables for serving, I found that cooking them separately in the defatted broth was best since the meat didn't get in the way. As for the vegetables and herbs I wanted to flavor the broth (which would be discarded), I settled on two medium to large onions, one leek, one celery stalk, two carrots, 1 large ripe tomato, 3 medium cloves garlic, 6 whole cloves, 10 sprigs parsley, 4 sprigs thyme, and 2 bay leaves. I also added one teaspoon each of salt and peppercorns. The dish may need more salt at the finish but you must be careful not to add too much salt now since the broth intensifies as it cooks.

As for the vegetables for serving, the losers were leeks, sundried tomatoes, and artichokes. I liked potatoes, carrots, turnips, peas, pearl onions (frozen are fine), green beans, peas, asparagus, fennel, parsnip, and rutabaga. They each have their proper cooking times and so I divided them into three categories: 20 minutes, 10 minutes, and five minutes. You can use any combination you like.

To finish the dish I tried a variety of sauces including horseradish cream, gremolata, ginger/garlic, and a simple salsa verde. The latter was the winner and is included below. (It is, however, optional.)

FRENCH-STYLE BOILED DINNER WITH SALSA VERDE

This is a good recipe for company since most of the work can be done the day before. It also provides both meat and vegetables – all you need is bread and wine. Don't depend on the cooking time for the meat – keep cooking it until it is really fork tender.

For the meat and the broth:
4 pounds chuck
4 pounds beef short ribs, beef shank, or veal shank or any combination
2 medium or large onions, peeled and quartered through the core
1 leek, trimmed and cut into large pieces
2 medium to large carrots, cut into large chunks
1 large ripe tomato, quartered
3 garlic cloves, smashed
6 whole cloves
10 sprigs parsley
4 sprigs thyme
2 bay leaves
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon peppercorns

To finish the dish:
7 to 8 pounds prepared vegetables of your choice (see below)

20 Minute Cooking Time
Small Red Potatoes Washed and left whole
Carrots Peeled, halved, thin end halved lengthwise, thick end quartered
Fennel Bulb Tops cut off, bulb quartered through the core
Turnip, Medium Peeled, quartered
Rutabaga Peeled, cut into 1 1/2-inch chunks

10 Minute Cooking Time
Parsnip Peeled, halved, thick end quartered

Five Minute Cooking Time
Peas Fresh or frozen
Asparagus Thick ends snapped off
Green Beans Trimmed
Pearl Onions Frozen

1. Place all of the ingredients for the broth with three quarts of water into a large Dutch oven or soup pot. Bring to a boil skimming scum as necessary. Reduce heat to maintain gentle simmer and cook, covered, for 2 to 3 hours or until the meat is fork tender. Cool to room temperature and refrigerate overnight.

2. Remove solid layer of fat that has formed over the broth. Reheat until warm over low heat. Strain broth into a large saucepan. Separate the meat from the vegetables and discard vegetables. Place the meat back into Dutch oven and ladle a couple cups of broth over meat. Continue to cook over low heat until hot.

3. Bring remaining broth to a boil. Taste for seasoning adding additional salt if necessary. Add vegetables from the 20 minute category and once the broth comes back to a boil cook for 10 minutes. Add vegetables from the 10 minute category and cook for five minutes once broth has returned to a boil. Add vegetables from the five minute category and boil for five minutes. Place the meat on a large platter or cutting board. Cut the chuck into thick slices on the bias. Arrange the vegetables on a large platter. Ladle a small amount of broth over the meat and vegetables. Serve with optional green sauce.

Serves eight to ten.

GREEN SAUCE

This sauce can be made and refrigerated up to two days ahead but should be allowed to sit out for about 20 minutes to come up to room temperature before serving.

1/2 cup best quality olive oil
2 tablespoons red wine or white balsamic vinegar
1 slice day old European style bread cut into 1-inch cubes, about 1 cup
2 tablespoons capers
1 medium garlic clove, coarsely chopped
2 cups flat leaf Italian parsley, coarsely chopped and loosely packed
2 anchovy fillets, coarsely chopped
1 teaspoon Dijon mustard
1/8 teaspoon salt or to taste
Freshly ground black pepper to taste

Add oil and vinegar to the bowl of a food processor. Place bread cubes in puddles of oil and vinegar and let sit for five minutes. Add all other ingredients and process for about 40 seconds or until the mixture is finely chopped and homogeneous stopping to scrape down the sides of the bowl if necessary. Taste for seasoning adding additional salt and pepper if desired. Serve immediately.

included Sally Field, Shirley MacLaine, Dolly Parton, Julia Roberts, Tom Skerritt, and Dylan McDermott.

"The play beautifully captures the unique, intimate relationships that exist between women," according to Rafferty. The director says she doesn't expect local audiences to have any trouble understanding their Southern sisters.

"New England women are darn funny, too, and should really be able to relate to these characters. The women are Southern in their accents and clothes, of course, but otherwise this salon could be anywhere on the South Shore."

Unlike the movie, the stage production has only one set and no male characters. Rafferty thinks that theatergoers familiar with the story only from its big screen rendering will be drawn to the simpler stage version.

"When people who loved the movie remember it, they think of the interaction between the women and their many zingers. People fell in love with the movie, because of the story's great humanity."

A New Jersey native, Rafferty is married and has three small children. With a Master's in Theater from Montclair, NJ, State College and many directing credits behind her, Rafferty has made a smooth professional and personal transition to life in Scituate.

"The theater scene is so vibrant in greater Boston," she says. "It is also astonishing to find such a vital community theater presence here."

Since moving to the area in January 2000, Rafferty has directed productions for Hingham Civic Music and other theater companies. Early next year, she is slated to helm Arthur Miller's "The Crucible" for the Cohasset Dramatic Club. Rafferty has also branched out into playwriting with "MOM-ologues," which she co-authored with Stefanie Cloutier and Sheila Eppolito. The play, a comedy about motherhood which Rafferty also directed, was presented at Boston's ICA Theatre last season. The play did so well in its original run, according to Rafferty, that it will be mounted again at the ICA in the spring of next year.

("Steel Magnolias" will be presented by the Company Theatre, 30 Accord Park Drive, Norwell, from October 11-27. For tickets, call 781/871-2787, or for further information, visit www.companytheatre.com).

A slice of Hingham

"It was difficult at times to gather information about Lincoln when I was putting the book together," Vinal noted. "The world of Hingham-Accord in his time seems so long gone now. But I tried to keep the book in its time context, everything except for the color plates. All of the photos and information that I finally included are relevant to his time. Because there is very little, if any, conjecture about him, I tried to keep the text to hard, factual information in an economic way."

The information collected for final draft is arranged in neat, graphical order amidst the book's 90 pages. An opening, succinctly drawn biographical summary is followed by a detailed without being superfluous description of the art and craft of decoy making. Then the book offers intriguing artifacts shaping a multi-faceted portrait of Lincoln the man, such as a 1918 Boston Sunday Globe profile ("Decoy Making His Unique Trade"), a topically focused 1926 piece from the Boston Traveler ("Joseph Whiting Lincoln, Expert Decoy Maker, Urges Fair Play for Duck Hunters of State") and an additional Traveler feature from 1933. Finally, there's a recollection of Accord's early 20th century North Shore Gun Club of which Lincoln was a member.

"Back in Lincoln's time, Accord was really like a little metropolis of its own," Vinal said. "Lincoln lived there where he farmed, hunted, fished, rode his bicycle to the post office, virtually his whole life was wrapped up in Accord. But his decoys were so expert and artfully done that he became well known up and down the East Coast."

"Joseph W. Lincoln" is a limited edition volume of 1,000 copies and published independently by Vinal. It's available by mail order from the author's office at 41 Sharp Street, Hingham or by phone at 781 337-1030.

evening. The event will mirror Mount Blue's summer benefit with an auction, food, beer and wine from the restaurants vendors, and live entertainment.

Mount Blue co-owners Aerosmith have anted up with some signed memorabilia for the auction as have area restaurants, artists and merchants. There will also be a few surprises on the auction block, including sports memorabilia — highlighted by a baseball with Mickey Mantle history which Weigel says was headed to the Hall of Fame before its owner offered it up to Weigel. He is also trying to get a few celebrities from the entertainment and sports field to make an appearance, but didn't want to give too much away.

"Everybody I approached has been great about saying they would help out," Weigel says with an enthusiasm that is obviously contagious.

Weigel has known Timber Creek Director Cindy McCarthy all his life and has marveled at the good work at the farm.. He's hoping to raise $20,000 through the benefit to help Timber Creek charities provide therapy for people who have exhausted their insurance and other financial resources. Known as a Center for Healing and Hope, Timber Creek offers equine-assisted physical, occupational and speech/language therapy.

"Volunteers are paid in miracles. It really is amazing," said Weigel. "There was an autistic boy who finally recognized his mother after nine years because of the therapies he's received. There was girl who couldn't even move before she went to Timber Creek. How can you tell people like that they have to be turned away when their insurance is up?"

Weigel, who has been organizing the evening for several months, says this event is his way of giving something back. He considers himself fortunate and wants to help out.

"What can get done at Timber Creek is so much bigger than this event," he says. "But I knew I had to do something and that's where this comes in."

Mount Blue's summer bash has become a must-attend event in the last few years, with the restaurant pulling out all the stops with food and its vendors graciously providing the tempting libations. And, of course, there's the music. No less is expected for Monday's program which will feature live entertainment by the Joe Mac Band and the Joe Leary Band with Dicky Barrett of the Mighty Bosstones serving as honorary chairperson. Weigel promises the Norwell restaurant will be jumping.

Tickets for the event are still available at $50 per person. Call the restaurant at 781-695-0050 for reservations and further information

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 9
A 90-degree alignment of Mercury and Saturn urges you to streamline your workload; don't make any more commitments until the backlog has been cleared. The Scorpio moon becomes inactive at 8:38 a.m., when the moon aligns with Mercury. At 10:21 a.m. the moon enters Sagittarius. Kick back and mellow out completely this evening.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 10
The planet Venus takes the spotlight today. At 2:35 p.m. Venus, standing at 16-degrees of Scorpio, begins retrograde travel until November 21. This is not a favorable period for making major financial investments or long-term commitments to others. On the other hand, it brings a time to reflect, reorient, refocus; redress the balance in personal or professional relationships that have become too one-sided. An upbeat Sagittarius moon is a major plus in today's planetary picture.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 11
Gear up for another challenging day. Mercury returns to the sign Libra at 1:56 a.m., remaining there until October 31. The planet Saturn turns retrograde at 8:58 a.m., 29-degrees Gemini. This is a time to conserve and consolidate what you have rather than borrowing, spending, taking risks. The Sagittarius moon forms stressful contacts to Mars at 9:01 a.m. and Saturn at 12:07 p.m., when it becomes inactive. Maintain a low profile. Don't rock the boat in business or romance. The moon enters conservative Capricorn at 1:45 p.m.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 12
A Capricorn moon makes this an excellent weekend for working, studying, repaying debts or fulfilling promises. Keep your nose to the grindstone. Hard work will pay off. The Capricorn moon forms one alignment today, an easy 60-degree contact to Venus at 5:48 p.m. Enjoy a quiet evening with close friend and family.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 13
The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 1:33 a.m. This moon is growing in light until October 21, when the full moon culminates. Read yesterday's advice. The moon continues active travel in Capricorn, and Mars prepares to align with Saturn, the planetary ruler of Capricorn. You may have to face the facts about situations that have been troubling you and make tough decisions. The Capricorn moon becomes inactive at 6:42 p.m. until 8:51 p.m., when an Aquarius moon takes over.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 14
Planetary action tops the charts for vacationing. Take a break from routine and responsibilities. Treat yourself to a day of leisure; enjoy favorite friends and pastimes. The Aquarius moon conjoins with Neptune at 12:32 p.m., generating a relaxed, freewheeling kind of mood. Don't take anything too seriously. Follow your bliss.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 15
It may be difficult to get back to business and practical matters today. The moon continues its travel in freedom-loving Aquarius. The planet Mars enters Libra at 1:38 p.m., remaining there until December 1. After that the green light goes on for new beginnings of all kinds. Be more adventurous and open to new experiences. A lunar alignment to Uranus makes for an exciting evening. Spur of the moment ideas will be the most successful.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 16
The Aquarius moon aligns with Saturn at 5:15 a.m. and becomes inactive. At 7:07 a.m. a Pisces moon takes over, beginning a 2 1/2 day period that is ideal for creativity and developing intuitive skills. However, organization and efficiency may take a back seat. Postpone business negotiations, transactions, major purchases. Get extra rest; pay attention to your dreams.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 17
A 90-degree alignment of Venus and Jupiter warns against overdoing on any level. Use common sense. Don't make impulsive or extravagant plans, promises or purchases. On the other hand, this planetary alignment evokes an easygoing, social mood. Take extra time out for rest and relaxation; enjoy favorite pastimes. An applying alignment of Mercury and Neptune continues to highlight all creative endeavors. You can find new inspiration and achieve breakthroughs.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 18
This is a great morning to change your routine; be more relaxed, playful. Enjoy the moment. Mercury aligns with Neptune at 6:50 a.m., and the sun forms a harmonious contact to Uranus at 10:07 a.m. In addition, the moon continues to travel in laidback Pisces, active until 5:16 p.m. An Aries moon begins at 7:13 p.m., bringing an energy boost. However, a lunar opposition to Mars is in effect this evening and warns against taking chances or doing anything risky.

Homecoming dance leads to suspensions, vandalism

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The Homecoming Dance is supposed to be a time of celebration.

Instead, this year, it was an event marred by several students who arrived under the influence of alcohol, which resulted in a student/administrator confrontation and subsequent suspensions. Later in the evening, vandals smashed the front windows of the school. It is unclear whether the events are related, but the school is cooperating with the police department to track down the perpetrators.

It began when an a male student at the Oct. 5 dance was accused of being drunk. He was escorted to a room to be questioned by Middle-Senior High School Principal Mike Jones and Health Education Coordinator Michael Gill. Several of the individual's friends followed the administrators to the office, and a verbal confrontation ensued.

"We had problems at one or two of the dances last year as well as the first dance of this year. We are seeing a pattern here."
— Supt. Edward Malvey

"At the dance there were several students that were under suspicion of being under the influence of alcohol," said Supt. Edward Malvey. "As is typical, a chaperone will speak to the youngster, then if it needs to be further reviewed, they will go to an nearby office and interview the student. In this instance here, a couple of other students come to try and intervene on behalf of the student."

According to Malvey, the student involved aggravated the situation. A large group of students also gathered outside the window of the office where the interrogation was taking place.

"The students were defiant towards the administrators and those students were told to leave," said Malvey. "Suspensions were meted out to several students."

The police investigated the incident and took pictures. Chief Robert Jackson said police will prosecute if the vandals can be identified. The penalty for being under the influence of alcohol at a school event is a two-day suspension for school, coupled with a 30-day suspension from all extracurricular activities, including sports.

The Homecoming Dance problem highlights a growing trend of open defiance to the administration that has Malvey concerned.

"Last year there were a number of students involved in a beach party," said Malvey. "We

No way one way?

Early reviews on Elm Street try are negative

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

It is early yet, but the it appears that many people are saying "No way" to the new one-way traffic pattern on Elm Street

Selectmen voted earlier this month to make Elm Street one way from Hingham Institution for Savings to St. Stephen's Church on a one-month trial basis. The move is meant to test out whether that kind of a traffic pattern would ease parking and pedestrian concerns in the village as the town moves forward with the Village Revitalization Project.

MCAS scores make the grade

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

It used to be that the SAT's were the most important test high school seniors faced.

This year, as the Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System becomes a graduation requirement, all that has changed.

Beginning with the Class of 2003, the state requires students to pass the Grade 10 tests or re-tests in math and language arts in order to graduate from high school.

Last month, the state released the scoring information from last year's test to the public.

In Cohasset, which has always scored well on the test, the news is good.

Friends, family say goodbye

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Most people don't think about sewers until they have a problem or get a betterment bill.

But Edward M. "Ted" Guild of Jerusalem Road thought about sewers just about every day of the past 20 years.

Solving the town's wastewater woes was an issue he was passionate about. He'd be the first to say he didn't do it all alone – but the fact is, Guild was the driving force behind the town's expanded sewer system.

During his10 years as chairman of the Sewer Commission, Guild spent innumerable hours on the town's sewer projects and often worked seven days a week, late into the evening.

So as Guild's family and many friends reflect on his full life this week, they can take solace that the husband, father, grandfather and World War II veteran, who also had a successful career in the private sector, left his mark on his adopted hometown. Guild succumbed to cancer last week at the age of 80.

"The town owes him a great deal," says Henry Rattenbury, who served on the Sewer Commission with Guild for many years. "He worked very hard and was very diligent and now the town has a state-of-the-art treatment plant that was well worth the investment.

"The town owes him a great deal."
— Henry Rattenbury

"Some may not have always agreed with him, but Ted did his homework and the town benefited from it."

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said Guild always had the town's best interest at heart

"Ted for years and years and years contributed significantly to the town," Sullivan said. "Through some of those years, he was controversial at times but he had the interest of the community in mind and he did a nice job."

Guild opted not to run for reelection to the Sewer Commission in the spring of 1999, after 17 years on the Growth and Development Committee, Oct. 21 at 7 p.m.

Sewer Commission, Oct. 21 at 7 p.m.

Board of Selectmen, Oct. 22 at 7:30 p.m.

Water Commission, Oct. 22 at 8:30 p.m. at the Town Hall (At Selectmen's meeting), Oct. 24 at 8 p.m. at the Water Treatment Plant on King Street.

Zoning Board of Appeals, Oct. 21 (Avalon), Oct. 28, Nov. 4, Nov. 14 (Avalon), Dec. 9, Dec. 16 (Avalon), all at 7:30 p.m. All Avalon meetings will be held in the selectmen's office and will be televised.

Conservation Commission, Oct. 24 at 7:30 p. m.

Committee on Town History, Nov. 11, 7:30 p.m., Lothrop House.

All meetings are at Town Hall unless otherwise indicated.

Forest Ave. sidewalk

Selectmen have announced that they will be discuss Special Town Meeting Article 10 that concerns constructing sidewalks on Forest Avenue at their Oct. 22 meeting at Town Hall.

There is not enough money in the budget to fund the entire project, but there are a variety of options available to the town, ranging from not doing any work, to doing some of the work, to borrowing and doing all of the work.

Harbor Committee

The Board of Selectmen accepted Daniel S. Evans' resignation from the Harbor Study Committee last week.

Under the suggestion of the committee, selectmen appointed Matthew Steele to take his place.

Bates resigns from CCHDC

Elizabeth Bates has announced her resignation from the Cohasset Common Historic District Commission in a letter to the Board of Selectmen dated Sept. 20.

Bates does not cite a reason and wishes the commission "continued success in (its) efforts to preserve and enhance the beauty of Cohasset's Common."

Butman steps down

Jody Butman has announced she is resigning from the Youth Resource Committee.

Jack Worley, the Director of the Recreation Commission, lauded Butman for her work in a letter accepting her resignation.

"It is with much regret that we must accept your resignation from the Youth Resources Committee," stated Worley. "Your effort, time and direction were absolutely vital towards our effort transforming the old highway garage into a functioning Teen Center for our youngsters."

Worley stated that it is "infrequent" that volunteerism rises to the level of commitment and productivity that Butman provided the Youth Resources Committee during her time on the board.

Free legal clinic

Do you have a legal question or are you confused about a legal issue? The Bar Association of Norfolk County is sponsoring free legal clinics as a public service to the community. A panel of attorneys experienced in all areas of the law will be available for a one on one consultation with you to discuss your legal questions.

All consultations are strictly confidential. The evening legal clinics will be held from 6 to 8 p.m. on Tuesday evenings at the Quincy District Court on the following dates: Oct. 29, Dec. 3, Jan. 7, Feb. 4, March 4, April 1, June 3, July 1.

For further information, contact Adrienne C. Clarke, Bar Association of Norfolk County at 617-471-9693.

Hedlund hours at Cohasset Town Hall

The October office hours for state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, are from noon-1 p.m., Thursday, Oct. 17 in the 2A vestibule at Town Hall.

Hedlund also has a district office at 66 Sea St., North Weymouth, that is accessible Monday through Friday for constituents and appointments with the senator.

The district office phone number is 781-340-9866.

Deal OKs naming of Little League diamonds

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Editor's note: Due to an editing error, the following story covering the compromise between selectmen and the Cohasset Youth Baseball and Softball Association was inadvertantly omitted from last week's Cohasset Mariner. However, a cartoon and editorial on the subject did run, which should have been accompanied by this story. The Mariner regrets the error. The story has been updated for this week.

The new ball fields located at the gravel pits will soon have names – possibly lots of them.

A compromise was reached just minutes before last week's selectmen's meeting, that will allow the Little League to sell naming rights to the diamonds, not the fields, for $25,000 and inscribe that name on the scoreboards. The overall complex will be named by a contest, which may be sponsored by the Red Lion Inn, but the selectmen will have the final say over which name is chosen.

"That is all it has ever been about – to give our donors, our very generous donors, the recognition that they deserve."
— Mark DeGiacomo, CYBSA

"We're pleased that what was an unpleasant situation has finally been resolved," said Mark DeGiacomo, president of the Cohasset Youth Baseball and Softball Association. "All the Little League ever wanted to do was to have the ability to raise the money that we promised the town we would raise. That is all it has ever been about – to give our donors, our very generous donors, the recognition that they deserve."

The selectmen's vote was unanimous in favor of the compromise, ending a controversy that reached an apex at its prior meeting when SelectmanTom Callahan asked the board to take a stand on the issue.

"I am glad a compromise got worked out," said Callahan after the agreement was reached. "I am not happy with all of the elements of the compromise, but that is one of the tests of how good a compromise is – everybody doesn't end up happy."

Callahan's sentiments were largely echoed by a board that appeared happy to have reached an agreement, but still not completely happy with the process.

"I wish we could have had a compromise that both sides were happy with," said Selectman Ronnie McMorris. "This is what the town needs to do now to move on."

Selectman Merle Brown was happy to get the deal done after initially being against the idea.

"I didn't think that this needed to go on any longer," said Brown. "We do not have a policy in this town as to what we should be doing with these fields and that is one of the problems that we have had in the past. Now we are looking at that situation more in-depth and we have to do something about it."

DeGiacomo was greeted with hugs and pats on the backs by a large contingent of Little League supporters downstairs in the Town Hall after the board voted.

"Anyone who compares the Little League fundraising effort to commercialization is clearly uninformed about what we are trying to do," said DeGiacomo. "To say naming a diamond "Freedom Diamond" in honor of a casualty of Sept. 11 or in honor of a deceased relative is in any way similar to Bob Kraft selling the naming rights to his stadium is ridiculous."

Town Manager Mark Haddad was also glad to have the issue resolved and the concentration back on the completion of a "beautiful" complex.

"I'm very pleased that the Little League and the Selectmen were able to resolve their differences," said Haddad. "Go out and look at the field, it is absolutely beautiful. I can't wait to see the first game on the field next year."

Over the course of the week since Callahan asked for community input on the subject, Town Hall received 78 responses in favor of the Little League and three in favor of the Callahan stance. Those responses came in the form of phone calls, faxes, and emails.

The Little League circulated a flyer over the weekend (Oct. 5-6), urging supporters to contact the selectmen to communicate their view. The flyer also outlined the Little League's position on the issue. That flyer and other efforts by the Little League during the process left Callahan displeased.

"We were bad-mouthed, characters were attacked, our integrity was attacked," said Callahan. "I think we were put into this position by a lot of misrepresentation and misinformation that was put out there, such as the flyer that was distributed this weekend. I don't like being pushed into a corner with a gun to my head."

The project was initially funded by a $200,000 appropriation from the general fund at last year's Town Meeting, a $100,000 from the Community Preservation Fund, and a $150,000 commitment from the Little League.

As part of the $150,000 — which Little League has raised for the $450,000 project — $100,000 was pledged on a naming rights commitment.

The Red Lion Inn will reportedly contribute $50,000 to the fields and had asked for the right to name the three field complex through community input and possibly a contest.

Finally, Shellanne and John Durkin, contributed $25,000 to the fields and had asked the softball field be named "Freedom Field" in honor of their friend who died at the World Trade Center on Sept. 11. After the initial backlash against naming the fields, the Durkins told the Little League to take the money regardless of whether their request would be honored.

A third donor the Little League had secured dropped out after the controversy erupted.

Fire hydrants to be a lot easier to locate

The Water Commission has taken steps to make it easier for the Fire Department to find fire hydrants.

Every second counts when responding to a fire," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission, "so we have made it easier to find all 396 Fire hydrants in Cohasset (including the 58 hydrants supplied by Aquarion Water of Hingham) by painting the caps of the hydrants with a highly reflective glass-bead paint, which is similar to the paint used on street line markings, which will make it much easier to find fire hydrants at night or in a storm."

"We also have spent $10,000 to provide the Fire Department with a laptop loaded with software that will help them locate fire hydrants."
— Water Commissioner Glenn Pratt

"We also have spent $10,000 to provide the Fire Department with a laptop loaded with software that will help them locate fire hydrants," said Water Commissioner Glenn Pratt, who managed this project.

"With this software," said Pratt, "the Fire Dept. Shift Commander, while on the way to an incident, will be able to input the address of the fire, and a map will appear on the computer screen showing all fire hydrants in a 600 foot radius, locating all nearby hydrants by the closest street address. The 911 dispatch center has also been provided with this software."

"Additional information will also be displayed," explained "including the fire flow available at each hydrant, or the size of the water main serving the hydrant if fire flow is not available, and any hazard materials or conditions known to be at that location. This system, which is based on the Water Department Geographic Information system (GIS) database for the water system will be updated periodically as the Water Department adds new hydrant locations."

The Water Department, as part of its annual fire hydrant maintenance program, has also been testing, greasing, and painting all of the fire hydrants, and has been clearing brush and shrubs around each hydrant.

Reaccreditation goes well for high school

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The New England Association of Schools and College's visit to Cohasset High School is over, and according to the administration, it appears the school has passed with flying colors.

"I think it went very well," said Principal Mike Jones. "I expect to receive a positive response from the Commission on Secondary Education reports back to us."

From Sept. 29-Oct. 2, a visiting committee from the NEASC was at the school, rating its performance in seven specific areas — mission and expectation, curriculum, instruction, assessment of student learning, leadership and organization, school-based resources for learning, and community-based resources for learning.

Every 10 years, the New England Association of Schools and Colleges visits public secondary schools in the region for the purpose of re-accreditation.

The visiting committee compiles a draft report about a month afterwards, but a final decision will not be made until March of next year.

"It's a fairly lengthy process," said Jones. "Within a month or so, the chair of the Visiting Committee will send me a draft and I will check that draft for factual accuracy and return it to the chair. Then, he will finalize it and submit it to the Commission on Secondary Education for the NEASC and they will review it and make a decision."

The actual accreditation visit is only a small part of the process. The school must first complete at 12-month self-assessment prior to the visit and then must follow up with a plan of action, as well as filing progress reports at the two-year and five-year marks.

"I think the faculty did a very thorough job with the self-study," said Jones. "The Committee was impressed with the quality and detail of our report."

Only five students have not passed the 10th-grade test (out of 90 at the school) and the administration is confident that those who have yet to pass, are capable of doing so.

The main reason for that confidence is a rigorous extra help program, that identifies problem areas and works to strengthen them.

"I think if we are going to be measured, we want to be on the positive side of things," said School Committee Chairman Richard Flynn. "The teachers, the students, and the administrators have all rallied around the test in order to get the performance up to where it needs to be."

The purpose of the high-stakes MCAS exams is to help school districts align their curriculum with the state curriculum frameworks so that certain subject matter is covered at a particular grade level regardless of in what town the student lives.

The tests have come under attack by the Massachusetts Association of School Committees, which opposes linking the test to graduation.

Pending state funding, a tutoring program will be available to students to help them prepare for a MCAS re-test in December.

Individual student reports and school results are used to identify areas in which students need assistance to improve their performance.

Curriculum Director Ruth Fennessy presented an overview to School Committee members at their meeting last Thursday.

On the 10th-grade English test, 47 percent of the students were rated advanced, 44 percent were rated proficient, 7 percent were rated needs improvement, and 2 percent failed. At the state level, only 19 percent scored advanced, 40 percent scored proficient, 27 percent scored needs improvement, and 14 percent failed.

On the 10th-grade math test, 42 percent scored advanced, 31 percent were proficient, 20 percent were needs improvement, and 7 percent were failing. Those numbers again were well ahead of state averages.

But just because Cohasset scores well, doesn't mean all is well.

"Well, I think we all believe in standard," said Fennessy. "Every one of us in favor of standards. What we would like to see is the test reflecting those standards and sometimes that doesn't seem to be the case."

Case in point, according to Fennessy, is the eighth-grade Social Studies test.

No Cohasset students scored advanced on the test, while only 12 percent tested proficient. The large majority of the grade tested in the needs improvement category, while 21 percent failed the test.

Those numbers pale in comparison to the state numbers, where 88 percent of the students tested into the needs improvement or failing category. Of that 88 percent, 42 percent failed outright.

"The grade eight Social Studies scores being reported around the state are rather pathetic," said Fennessy. "I think the scope of the test is too wide."

Add to that the fact that the Curriculum Frameworks for history have changed five times since the inception of the Education Reform Act of 1993.

Despite the flaws of the test, everyone involved was pleased with the results.

"The graduation rate is very favorable," said Flynn. "Any students having difficulty are given the resources to raise their scores. It has been a great overall effort."

Fennessy agreed.

"The teachers have responded exceedingly well to various methods of helping children do better on the MCAS," said Fennessy. "They have used past tests that have been give, formulated the type of questions they will encounter, as well as offering after-school, small-group tutorials for kids in need of help."

Options for students who do not meet MCAS requirements

•MCAS support services

Governor Swift has provided $50 million for the second year in a row for before, during and after-school extra-help programs, summer school programs, Summer of Work and Learning programs, on-line and one-on-one tutoring. Beginning this year, all exiting 12th graders who have not yet met the MCAS requirement will have access to an "adviser" in their school or community to help determine a pathway after the graduation date.

•Local Certificates

The possibility for earning state-endorsed local credential certificates for those who do not meet MCAS requirements. This could be used as a stepping-stone to earning a diploma for students who can later pass MCAS.

•Summer help programs ending with August retest

A $5 million competitive grant is being offered for developing extra-help programs specifically for students in the class of 2003 who do not pass MCAS by June. A summer of work and learning and community college programs are examples. An additional $10 million will be spent on academic support programs in high schools around the state for 11th and 12th graders to focus on math and English testing. The program will end with a re-test in August offered only to students in the class of 2003 who participated in these programs.

•MCAS appeals

Students must have taken the grade 10 MCAS at least three times, scored at least 216 on the exam once, maintained at least a 95 percent attendance level during the previous school year and the year of the appeal and participated in the tutoring and support services made available by the school. Seven re-test opportunities will be given for students in the fall and spring. Students can re-take the exam as many times as needed after their graduation date.

Support for MCAS resolution sought

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

The Massachusetts Coalition for Authentic Reform in Education recently contacted local school committees asking their support in passing a resolution "asserting you will continue to award graduation diplomas to seniors who have passed all local requirements," regardless of their MCAS scores.

The Hampshire Regional, Cambridge, and Falmouth School Committees have all passed such resolutions.

Tenth-graders must pass the math and English language arts MCAS in order to graduate.

The diplomas would be awarded instead of abiding by a proposed state system which would provide students who don't pass MCAS but would otherwise graduate with a "certificate of completion."

There is a concern among many school committees and administrators that students who don't graduate because they failed MCAS will have self-esteem issues.

While recognizing that education reform "had the laudable goal of redressing funding inequities and identifying students who need extra help to achieve academically," the coalition notes that the percentage of students dropping out, being held back, or leaving public school between ninth and 10th grade has increased from six to 13 percent a year since MCAS was implemented.

"We are relieved for those students who have managed to clear the MCAS hurdle in time to graduate this year, but the fact remains that no single test should determine a student's future, especially not one as flawed and controversial as the MCAS," the coalition wrote in its Sept. 18 letter to local school committees.

The coalition also requested school committees sign on to another resolution, which originated with the Brookline School Committee, asking the Massachusetts Association of School Committees (MASC) to affirm the right of school boards to retain diploma-granting authority.

Schools nix request for $99K from Special Town Meeting

But bus issue won't go away

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

In recognition of the tight financial state of the town, the School Committee has decided not to seek the additional $99,000 it expected to request to cover unexpected expenses at the Nov. 18 Special Town Meeting.

That does not include the $100,000 the school department needs to fully fund its fiscal year 2003 budget, an amount that was approved at the annual Town Meeting last spring.

The School Committee voted to withdraw a request for $7,000 to cover the cost of the early retirement of janitor Kevin Soule, hold a request for $32,000 to save the elementary school health program, and delay a request for $60,000 to purchase a new school bus.

The school department is obligated to pay for the retirement and will search for the money internally. As for the health program, both the schools and the town are scouring their budgets for a combination of funds that will save the program.

The agreement to delay the purchase of a new bus was brokered by School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn, Supt. Edward Malvey, Town Manager Mark Haddad, and the Advisory Committee. The deal will put off the purchase of a new bus until the Annual Town Meeting this spring.

Come Dec. 1, though, the school's contract with Totman Enterprises of Scituate for an extra bus runs out, and the schools will attempt to run five bus routes, with only five buses.

According to Flynn, the agreement was reached with an understanding that if a severe problem were to arise, the Advisory Committee would approve a new bus purchase with funds from the reserve account.

"The transportation of students is very important, and if we have a problem we will be forced to go to the advisory board."
— School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn

"I think we need to work with the town given the current financial situation," said Flynn. "We're trying to tighten our belt as much as possible. That being said, the transportation of students is very important, and if we have a problem we will be forced to go to the advisory board."

Business Manager Ivan Klimko, who is heading up the busing operation, said that the town is using the time with the extra bus to update the town's current fleet mechanically.

But, despite the repairs that have been done, Klimko is still nervous about running with only five buses.

"Remember that on Aug. 19 is when we knew that we couldn't get anyone to run the buses for us," said Klimko. "That meant we had approximately two weeks before school began and we had to take back all the buses, have them inspected, make sure that they were mechanically sound. We ended up finding that they weren't satisfactory to us." (Ingle Bus of Hanover did not wish to renew its contract to operate the Cohasset school bus service).

If a bus breaks down, the school will have to run double runs. If the breakdown happens in the morning the delay will result in a loss of instructional time.

While remaining hopeful that things would work out, Klimko presented a skeptical view to the School Committee so it would be prepared for any alternative.

Klimko pointed to a State Police inspection a few weeks back, that grounded "two or three" of the buses for failing inspection. School buses are kept to a much stricter inspection regimen than ordinary cars and can be grounded at any time by the State Police who conduct routine checks. The school has since fixed the problems, most of which were minor, but even that scenario would force the double runs issue.

School Committee member Mark DeGiacomo wants the committee to watch the busing situation very closely.

"I want to have a hair-trigger on this situation," said DeGiacomo, after listening to Klimko speak. "And at the first sign of a problem, I want to pull that hair-trigger."

The School Committee has already invested $15,000 (a quarter of the $60,000 price of a new bus) for the three month contract. According to Klimko, there wasn't much choice. The buses that the town owned needed to be fixed and the students needed to get to school.

"We hedged by renting the sixth bus," said Klimko. "We would have not wanted to have spent $15,000, but they would take a contract for less than three months. It wasn't worth their while."

had problems at one or two of the dances last year as well as the first dance of this year. We are seeing a pattern here."

As the situations become more serious, the school department will have to start looking beyond its walls for help.

"As students become more defiant, bordering on civil disobedience, we may have to have the involvement of the police," said Malvey. "There is only so much that the school can do."

School Committee Chairman Richard Flynn said he was "disgusted" with the incident, and wanted to make clear the committee's position on the issue.

"The support is clearly with the administration," said School Committee Chairman Richard Flynn. "It is up to the parents, students and administration to figure out how we are going to correct the problem."

School Committee Vice-Chairman Chartis Tebbetts is concerned that the current student leadership at the school isn't doing its job.

"I'm really concerned that the student leadership is not stepping up when it has to," said School Committee Vice-Chairman Chartis Tebbetts. "We have a very fine administration that wants to create an environment that will allow these students to go to fine colleges and develop their abilities, and they are slapping them in the face with this type of behavior."

Beyond that, Tebbetts called on the parents of the students to maintain a better watch over their children.

"Parents have to step up and be responsible for their children," said Tebbetts. "They should go to school events sober, and without alcohol. They should be dressed appropriately with all the 'T's' dotted and 'T's' crossed as to where they are going and how they are going to get home."

The Mariner received a letter to the editor from the Cohasset High School Student Council that denounced the actions.

"A few irresponsible people performed a malicious act against the high school, disgracing the students, faculty, and our town of Cohasset," states the letter. "We do not condone such behavior and we believe these actions to be a misrepresentation of the positive character of Cohasset High School."

Jones, the principal, has already held meetings with the student body and the various arms of student leadership to try and address the problem. The school is actively investigating the vandalism incident and will pursue all legal avenues once the people responsible are found. That being said, Malvey does not believe that this is indicative of the entire school.

"I don't believe that it is reflective of the student body in general," said Malvey. "However, we must raise the bar with them and their families, and the community that alcohol is not going to be tolerated in the schools."

Jones agrees that the event is out of character and represented only a small segment of the school's population.

"In many ways it is uncharacteristic of our students, who are wonderful to work with," said Jones. "When the Accreditation team (in the schools for the reaccreditation process) ask me what I like the most about working in Cohasset a few weeks ago, I said, 'the students.'"

Malvey is looking into updating the school's policies in order to deal with the rising problem.

"We are going to be taking a fresh look at it," said Malvey. "I believe that the appropriate policies are in place. If we get to a situation where students are showing up under the influence of alcohol more often than not, than we will need to address that."

Det. Rick Grassie said that Jones has approached him about the potential for having a detail officer at dances. NO decision has been made yet, but Grassie thinks that police presence would be a good deterrent to underage drinking. There is no school resource office because the police did not receive a grant to fund the project.

HEARING LOSS AND NEWBORNS
While many hospitals test newborn babies' hearing, they cannot find every child with hearing problems or ensure follow-up care. With this in mind, parents should be aware of some listening and speech milestones in children. At birth, babies should awaken or startle to loud sounds, make pleasurable sounds, and respond or hush to a caregiver's voice. By three months, babies will watch a speaking parent's face, smile when spoken to, and repeat cooing sounds. From 4-6 months, infants will respond to changes in a parent's tone of voice, look for the source of sounds, and babble or use simple sounds. From 7-12 months, toddlers will begin to recognize words for common items and begin to make speech sounds.
Our primary mission here at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER is to help as many people as possible improve their hearing. We hope to help through education, advanced technology, and friendly, compassionate service. For complete hearing health services, from a knowledgeable understanding of how the body's hearing mechanisms work, to a deep commitment of knowing what's available today to help each individual's hearing loss, we welcome you to visit us at 80 North Avenue, Rt. 139, North Medical Building, Abington. Phone: 781-878-9723. We offer FREE hearing evaluations, FREE batteries for the life of any hearing instrument purchased, and FREE repairs of any make of hearing.
P.S. Risk factors for hearing loss among newborns include a family history of childhood hearing loss, infections sustained by the mother during pregnancy (such as syphilis, herpes, and rubella), and bacterial meningitis, among others.

Court decision could put Logan legal fight in limbo

Runway critics are determined to stay on course

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Opponents of a proposed new Logan Airport runway were dealt a blow last week when a judge dismissed a lawsuit attempting to stop the project.

On Friday, Plymouth Superior Court Judge Charles Hely made a summary (independent) judgment stating there wasn't enough evidence to support the opponents' viewpoint.

But they're not giving up the fight.

Still, runway opponent Thomas Maloney of Hingham finds it disturbing to hear that the judge "just threw the case out claiming there was not enough evidence to go forward. It shows us just how much power Massport has. Anyone reading the summary judgment document can see it's flawed and how much of a negative impact the new runway will have on Hingham and surrounding towns."

At the same time, the FAA claims air traffic congestion would be relieved by the construction of a new runway.

The lawsuit was filed in Plymouth County by Hull, Hingham, Cohasset, and Revere, challenging Massport's environmental findings on the project.

Just what the next step will be has not yet been determined, according to Attorney William Golden of Baker, Braverman, and Barbadoro, P.C., of Braintree, who represents the four towns in the lawsuit.

"There's a lot at stake with regard to present and future impacts," he said. "It's ultimately up to the elected officials in the towns involved, but we're providing all the information we can (with regard to the legal aspects)."

Hingham and Hull officials met with Golden and other members of his legal team Tuesday to discuss various alternatives.

The towns involved in the lawsuit have 30 days to decide whether or not to appeal the case.

"We have other options," Golden said. "One of them is requesting a motion for reconsideration. I still believe we have a strong case. We now have to decide whether to let the judge's decision stand."

Golden called the judge's ruling "difficult to understand but not unexpected."

"There are some very serious questions of law involved and a number of discussions to come," said Golden. "The judge acknowledged we provided significant proof of the negative impacts to the South Shore. Still, it's a question of law as to what our recourse is, which may be through an unreviewable environmental process. As it stands now, the Secretary of Environmental Affairs makes a decision and that's it."

"I still believe we have a strong case. We now have to decide whether to let the judge's decision stand."
— Bill Golden, attorney

Hingham Selectmen Chairman Mathew MacIver said the town is in the process of taking a close look at the summary judgment document.

"We have to think very carefully before making a decision," he said.

The runway issue will be addressed again at the Oct. 29 Selectmen's meeting.

Cohasset Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said he's questioning how strong the towns' case was to begin with.

"I think it's over myself," he said about the fight. "Unless someone has some good ideas.

"I think we can work to change flight patterns a little bit, but even that will take some doing."

While pleased with the outcome, Massport spokesperson Barbara Platt is offering an olive branch to communities opposing the runway.

"While this may mark the end of the legal case, we hope it will also mark the beginning of a new and more positive relationship between Massport and our South Shore neighbors," she said.

On the other hand, Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, who along with a number of other legislators opposes the runway, is among those vowing to continue opposing the runway.

"This is just one step in the legal process," he said. "I would be interested in talking with Attorney Golden to see what his approach will be regarding an appeal. It's unfortunate the only avenue left is the legal process rather than the public policy arena — since Massport and the Federal Aviation Administration have already signed off on the project — unless we get a change of approach from the Governor's office."

Another lawsuit filed in Suffolk Superior Court to lift a 1976 injunction blocking construction of a new runway is scheduled for a hearing next spring.

"Our efforts will be concentrated there now," Bradley said. "The burden is on Massport to show that the circumstances surrounding that case have changed. The injunction remains our strongest argument."

Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, too, is disappointed with the outcome of the lawsuit.

"I feel strongly that Massport has consistently misrepresented data and the impacts of the proposed runway throughout the environmental process," he said.

Maloney notes there are already landings and take-offs passing over Hingham at the same time.

"Massport has every runway configuration sending planes over our area, some less than 2,000 feet over residents' homes, and directs all nighttime cargo planes to land over our town yet does not see this as a problem?"

Maloney and other runway opponents say Massport and the FAA need to make changes in those configurations whether the runway is built or not.

"The amazing thing is that changes could be made in a minute without affecting other communities, but our towns are being held hostage until they get the runway approved," he said. "Whether the planes take off toward South Boston or Winthrop, they end up over us."

Opponents have a number of solutions they would like to be considered, including requiring airplanes to continue to climb over the water, heading in the direction they are going rather than turning back over South Shore communities as they take off.

The FAA, which approved the runway with a number of conditions, is limiting its use to times when winds from the northwest or southeast exceed 10 knots per hour (11.5 m.p.h.), which causes delays on other runways, with penalties imposed if that stipulation isn't followed.

But that's not enough, say opponents, who cite serious noise and air pollution and health issues as key reasons to stop the project. They are also concerned that the number of flights passing over South Shore communities could triple if the new runway is built.

In dismissing the case, the judge further noted that state law does not allow communities to file a nuisance claim against a state agency.

The South Shore Jet Pollution Council and Hingham's Jet Noise Task Force have been fighting the plan for some time.

"Residents need to get involved now to get the distribution of flights over our area down to a reasonable level," Maloney said. "We all know we live near a major airport, but there is no reason whatsoever why every flight pattern has to send planes over our homes."

In April, Hingham Town Meeting appropriated an additional $100,000 to oppose the runway, bringing its total to $178,500 and Cohasset has spent $78,500.

MacIver, the Hingham selectmen chairman, recently noted that the end purpose of the litigation was to provide relief from air traffic generated from a new runway and explore ways to redirect existing traffic.

"I don't think local officials took asking for money from their respective communities to fight the runway lightly," Hedlund said. "There was a significant basis for them doing so."

Elm Street one-way trial starts with poor reviews located after the Revitalization project is completed, and a white sign that say "Do Not Enter" was placed in view of those cars traveling away from the Town Hall and Common on South Main Street. There was also a temporary stop sign in place on the left side of the end of Elm Street in order to emphasize the new one-way status.

"It's not too bad," said Sgt. David Pomarico, who was on detail at the site for the majority of the first day. "Most people are paying attention to the signs, and only a few people have tried to turn down here, but it is also creating other problems in the square."

Among those problems were illegal U-turns and increased traffic on Brook Street. Pomarico also notified Police Chief Bob Jackson that he felt the temporary stop sign was posted too high.

The new pattern of traffic generated several calls to the Town Hall, most of which were negative.

"This morning, the initial reaction was that people were adamantly opposed to it," Town Manager Mark Haddad said. "But then again, people have to get used to it. Give it a week or so, and if people are still opposed to it, I'm sure the selectmen will end the experiment."

Pomarico, watched the site all day, thinks that the problems may be associated more with the area, than with the change.

"It's such a congested area, it's difficult for a traffic pattern of any kind, especially a change like this," said Pomarico. "I don't know if there is a good solution or not, it is just such a tight area that anything would be difficult. Once they get acclimated to it, it might not work, but it is too early to tell."

Several business owners, who gamely agreed to go along with the experiment, are seeing their concerns come to life.

"I hesitate to pass judgement, but it seems like an illogical traffic pattern," said Jim Watson, owner of Cohasset Hardware. "I'd say more fairly come back in a week, but it seems to me that it doesn't make sense."

John Scott, of Cohasset News on Brook Street is concerned that confusion and increase parking in the vicinity of his store could hurt business.

"I think it is a bad idea," said Scott. "I don't know if it will affect me good or bad business-wise, but because people can't drive around the loop in order to park, they will just park here and I might lose business."

Joanne Reynolds, the branch manager for the Hingham Institution for Savings said many of her customers were unaware that the trial was beginning so quickly.

"We had several business customers come in today who said, 'Gee, I didn't know this was going to happen today," said "A lot of people in town don't like change and they have lived in this town a long time, we just have to wait and see how it plays out as far as the businesses go."

Will Sharafeldin, who works at the Tedeschi's on South Main Street, said that he didn't notice any change in business during the first day.
